"Where You Do Better"

The Faithful Hen.

We need a year to grow a pig.
'Tis two before a steer is big.
The hen lays every day.
Alfalfa takes three years to spread,
A horse as colt three years we fed,
The hen lays every day.
A field of grain just once we reap,
A yearly fleece take off our sheep,
The hen lays every day.
A few weeks yield the honey store,
Then blossoms, fruit and all is o'er,
The hen lays every day.
For other things, too long we wait,
Our life is short and pay day late,
The hen lays every day.
—Country Gentleman.

"How to Be Happy," not a sunshine lecture, but one on the laws of happiness. Many regard this as Mr. Lybarger's greatest production. It is filled with "worldly wisdom." It is not a "sunshine" lecture, but a search after the philosophy of right living. It is one lecture that has the courage to face the facts, to see things as they are. It shows not only the right of happiness and the duty of happiness, but the ways of happiness.
