Troubles of the Ancients.
Penelope was bewailing the protracted absence of Ulysses.
"I might as well be the wife of a commercial traveler," she said, "and do done with it!"
Scorning to avail herself of an easy divorce, she plunged deeper than ever into the pages of the Ladies' Home Journal for consolation.

No Chance for an Argument.
"If you had any life in you, Henry," she snapped.
"You'd go out there and fire the cook!"
"But I haven't, you see, Flo," he placidly yapped;
And he hurried himself in a book.—Chicago Tribune.

"You must rest," said the specialist, after a knowing thumping on the popular preacher's person. "You will be in the next world in three months unless you go abroad and take a complete rest."
"Oh, then I'll go abroad at once," replied the preacher, quite innocently.

A Real Danger.
"Gentlemen," said the president of the public service corporation, in his address to the stockholders, "It is my duty and pleasure to inform you that our balance sheet for the year now closing will show a highly satisfactory condition of affairs. We have added materially to our assets, and our profits have been such that we shall be able to declare a very handsome dividend. In fact, gentlemen," he added, lowering his voice, "our prosperity gives me some uneasiness. I cannot disguise or conceal from you an apprehension that J. Pierpont Morgan may have found it out and may be even now preparing to open his jaws and engulf this corporation in his capacious and insatiable maw!"
A dense silence ensued, and a thrill of horror ran through the assembly.
Well may we ask, "Who is safe these days?"—Chicago Tribune.

Maori Sufrages.
Women of the Maori tribe of New Zealand are now appearing as features of the show at the Hippodrome in New York City, and as they are educated and cultivated persons, and have the right to full suffrage in their native land, they chose three delegates to represent them at Mrs. Pankhurst's lecture in Carnegie hall recently. They were Kiri Matao, widow of an old Maori chief; Waapi, a young political leader and a prohibitionist, and Drama, who is 21, and last her vote for the Conservative at the last election. Englishmen in New Zealand have extended to women all the rights they themselves have, and that Mrs. Pankhurst and the English suffragettes of all sorts ask for.—Springfield Republican.

No Misrepresentation.
Boarder (at summer resort)—Didn't your booklet say there were no mosquitoes here?
Proprietor—It did, sir, and it told the exact truth. We had the booklet printed in February, and I am prepared to prove that there wasn't a blamed (slap) mosquito within 500 miles of here at that time.—Chicago Tribune.

Slot Machine for Suicide.
Washington—Drop a penny in the slot and get a ticket to the "other world" might be the inscription on a machine that is suggested by Rev. Dr. Donald Guthrie, of Baltimore. Dr. Guthrie, in talking on "Calvinism" at the closing session of the synod of Baltimore at the Metropolitan Presbyterian Church here. At the close of a plea for a wholesome, enthusiastic interest in life, he said: "Life has become so meaningless and so useless to some that I advocate the setting up of a suicide machine where one can deposit a cent and be killed easily and respectably."

MILES OF SUBWAY.

London Is the Most Tunnelled City in the World.
Until this year New York, even with its under-river extensions, could not even approach comparison with London. In another year or two New York may claim to have the most widely extended subway system, but till the present time America has been lamentably behind hand in this mode of transit.

One of the most remarkable facts about the London "tube" system is that it was constructed without the man in the street knowing anything about it. Occasionally one noticed that a house was pulled down and in its place a mysterious hoarding was raised, or a vacant lot suddenly began to show signs of activity. Pieces of castings would be brought up from time to time to disappear behind the hoarding. Not long ago a street was torn up, not a street was closed. The clouds of dust, the piles of dirt, the temporary boarded roadway were not known during the making of London's subway. And then one day the "tube" was announced to be ready for service. In Berlin the same thing happened, with modifications.

So rapid has been the building of these tubes that even Londoners are unable to avail themselves of the system to the fullest extent of its ramifications. There are now some seventy miles of tube tunnels under the London streets. New York's total underground is twenty-two and three-fourths miles.

The average depth of the London tubes below the surface is seventy feet. In some places, Hampstead Heath, for instance, the track is 190 feet below the surface. At all the stations there are elevators and steps for the convenience of passengers.

The most remarkable tube or subway station in the world is the one under the Bank of England. The Mansion House station, as it is called, is below the very busiest part of the city. Here are innumerable subways for trains as well as for foot passengers. Capt. Nott Bower, the police commissioner for the city of London, says that between 8 a. m. and 8 p. m. vehicles pass through Mansion House street at the average rate of thirty-seven a minute. The total is 25,520 vehicles, 25 per cent of which are public omnibuses. This makes it the most congested thoroughfare in the world. Pedestrians can avoid the dangers of crossing the street by walking down a few steps and crossing below the surface. The astonishing thing is that this network of subterranean passages was constructed without interfering with the never ending traffic above for a single instant.

While the tube system is remarkable, the District Railway, which is largely underground and has been in operation for nearly fifty years, is far more extensive and makes London the most tunnelled city in the world.

QUAINT SCHOOL CUSTOMS.

Quaint English Practices of Ancient Origins.
J. L. Paton, headmaster of an English grammar school, recently referred to a custom at Rugby School which forbids a boy of less than three years standing to turn up his trousers and insists on his doing so after that period. The custom is only a minor instance of the quaint practices that exist at all of the great public schools, and are maintained with religious care, though in many cases their origin is obscure or unknown. The Shrove Tuesday tossing of the pancake at Westminster School, with its ensuing scramble for the largest fragment, which gains for its possessor a guinea from the dean, is perhaps the best known among them.

A curious custom at Marlborough requires every boy to bring to school with him a cushion, technically termed a "kiss"—with the "i" long. This article is his inseparable companion in school time, and in addition to the ordinary functions of a cushion is employed to carry books from one form room to another. At Shrewsbury School at the beginning of each term "hall elections" are held for the posts of hall clerk, hall constable, hall porter and hall scavengers. The genial brutality of youth often selects for the position of hall clerk either the most nervous boy in the school or one who is afflicted with a stammer.

The new boy in the schoolhouse at Rugby is early called upon to take his part in "house singing." At this function, which is held in one of the dormitories, he has to render a song to the satisfaction of his audience, the penalty being the swallowing of a mouthful of soapy water. Another ancient school custom is the parade of the Christ's Hospital bluecoat boys before the Lord Mayor at the Mansion House on St. Matthew's day, when the "Greens," who correspond to "sixth formers" elsewhere, receive a guinea each and the rank and file of the school are presented with new shillings.

Rather Curious.
"My mother sent me over," said a youngster to a butcher who keeps a shop on a busy suburban street, "to show you the big bone bought with the piece of beef this morning."
"Tell your mother next time I kill a bullock without bones in it I'll make her a present of a joint," said the man of meat, with a grin.
"And mother says," continued the boy, "next time you find a bit of sirloin with a shoulder of mutton bone in it she'd like to buy the whole carcass as a curiosity."

Sizing Him Up.
"Do you regard that expert witness as a successful man?" asked one allepist.
"It depends," answered the other, "on whether you measure him by the amount of his learning or the size of his fees."—Washington Star.

Its Use.
"Do you think that Greek has much value in modern education?"
"Certainly," answered the young man with a college hat, "the Greek alphabet enables a man to know what frat he belongs to."—Washington Star.

Old Favorites

Down to Sleep.
November woods are bare and still; November days are clear and bright; Each noon burns up the morning chill; The morning's snow is gone by night; Each day my steps grow slow, grow light, As through the woods I reverent creep, Watching all things lie down to sleep.

I never knew before how soft and fragrant to swoon, and how soft to touch. The forest sighs, and shapes and spreads; I never knew before how much of human sound there is in such low tones as through the forest sweep when all wild things lie down to sleep.

Each day I find new coverlets Tucked in, and more sweet eyes shut tight; Sometimes the viewless mother bids Her ferns kneel down, full in my sight; I hear their chorus of "good-night;" And half I smile, and half I weep, Listening while they lie down to sleep.

November woods are bare and still; November days are bright and good; Life's noon burns up life's morning chill; Life's night rests feet which long have been aching; Some warm soft bed, in field or wood, The mother will not fail to keep, Where we can lay us down to sleep.—Helen Hunt Jackson.

Fame.
(From Lycidas.)
Alas! what boots it with incessant care To tend the homely slighted shepherd's trade, And strictly meditate the thankless Muse? Were it not better done, as others use, To sport with Amaryllis in the shade, Or with the tangles of Neaera's hair? Fame is the spur that the clear spirit doth raise—That last infirmity of noble mind—to scorn delights and live laborious days; But the fair guerdon when we hope to find, And think to burst out into sudden blaze, Comes the blind Fury with the abhorred congestion, thus unspun life "But not the praise," Phoebus replied, and touch'd my trembling ears; "Fame is no plant that grows on mortal soil, Nor in the glistening foil Set out to rot in heaven expect thy meed."—John Milton.

MEMORIAL FOR JOHN FITCH.
Thinks Honors in Steam Navigation Should go to Philadelphia.
The case of John Fitch is a sad one. He was the pioneer and was successful. He ran his boat on the Delaware river for months, but he was received with derision. There was then no man in this city—probably not in the whole country—with the prophetic vision of Chancellor Livingston at a later day who possessed the wealth and influence to impress the fact of Fitch's success on the public, the Philadelphia inquirer says. It argues ill for the state of enlightenment at that time that there was no one who could foresee the possibilities of steam navigation. If some Philadelphian had arisen at that moment to do what Livingston did subsequently in New York, much of our history might have been changed. We should have had steamboats on the western waters nearly twenty years earlier than we did, the events of the War of 1812 might have been more decided, and Napoleon might have had his steamers to cross the channel from Boulogne.

It is idle to speculate on what might have been, but it is certain that this city owes something to the memory of Fitch, the prophet whom it rejected. The least that can be done is to rear a monument to his memory and to place a headstone over his grave. In the library of the Historical Society to-day reposes the combined diary and autobiography of this man. It is one of the most pathetic of human documents. It shows the mighty soul of a man struggling against the stupidity and conservatism of his age. We think the Historical Society should take the initiative in the matter, and we believe that a reasonable sum can be secured for a suitable memorial to a man who was born out of due season, who deserved so much and got the worst.

How She Helps Girls.
Miss Annie Cowden has come from Australia to take charge of a home for girls in Philadelphia. She holds the rank of major in the Salvation Army and expects to do army work hereafter in this country. The start of her work in Philadelphia has been marked by a plan which Miss Cowden says she used with success in Australia. She advertises in the newspapers for girls to come to her. The other day the first of the advertisements was inserted as follows: "Any girl who needs help or advice may find a friend in Maj. Annie Cowden, at 5415 Lansdowne avenue." The address is that of the home, and the advertisement brought 112 girls from 12 to 20 years old.

"I have spent fourteen years in the service of the poor and suffering," says Miss Cowden, "and my whole heart is in the work. I don't believe in different moral codes for men and women, or for different classes. I believe that we are all human, liable to temptation and to sin, and I assure you that I learn as much from my girls as they do from me."

Eight women assist Miss Cowden in the home, which is supported entirely by the contributions of girls who have been lifted by its help.

People often feel like saying things to other people that they never do say.

DIRECTS A STEAMSHIP LINE.

Princess Waldemar, of Denmark, Is an Admirable Business Woman.
The Princess Waldemar of Denmark, daughter of the House of Orleans, and wife of the youngest brother of Denmark's king, is a most enterprising woman. There have been "admirals" among the royal women of Europe—women upon whom the honorary title and the privilege of wearing a "uniform" indicating the rank have been bestowed, but this daughter-in-law of the Danish house seems stirred by the spirit of the ancient Vikings. She is virtually at the head of a large steamship company, which she founded and which is constantly extending its lines.

Princess Waldemar, her husband, is commodore of the Danish navy, and her second son is attending the naval academy in order to fit himself for a career afloat. Through such association, as well as through inclination, the princess has become very familiar with things concerning the navy. She wishes to see the naval and commercial importance of Denmark increased, but as there is small chance for a considerable augmentation of the navy she has turned her attention to building up the merchant marine. Several years ago she began to use her influence and the money at her command in forming a new steamship fleet to help develop Scandinavian maritime interests.

Not being familiar with the needs and possibilities of the merchant marine she sought information from the leading authorities of her country, the great financiers, bankers and business men. There was not a phase of the subject into which she did not delve. She put out the prospectus of a company to operate a regular line of steamers between Scandinavia and various ports of the far east, and which would touch at intermediate places, and a company was formed promptly. The business now has passed the experimental stage and is a decided success. It is prosperous, and already has several branches, one of them in Russia.

The princess has her own office at the headquarters of the company, and every morning finds her at her desk. She takes an active interest in the business management of the concern, and is regarded as an authority upon several of its features. Not only is she an admirable business woman, but she dislikes the frills and weaknesses that so often mark royalty. She laughingly declares that, so far as she knows, she is the only royal princess in the world who has no lady in waiting. Nor does she employ a secretary to attend to her private correspondence. In addition she directs the details of her household, even to seeing the cook every day.

"My opinion," says the princess, "is that a woman may engage in business profitably, but that she should be a little strong-minded and as much feminine as possible. That all may know her love for the sea she has had a large anchor tattooed on her arm. This is plainly in evidence when she wears her court and evening gowns."

A LUDICROUS MISTAKE.

When the Welsh Girls Frightened Bonaparte's Troops.
Fishguard, the new Canard port of call, is a place of historic and romantic interest as the scene of Napoleon Bonaparte's futile attempt to invade Great Britain from his camp at Boulogne. A few French troops were actually landed there, with the expectation of holding their ground until reinforcements could be rushed across the Channel, and they might have effected their purpose but for a ludicrous mistake.

The local yeomanry and peasants rallied to hold them in check, but would probably have been helpless before the French veterans had the latter advanced upon them or even maintained their ground. But a great throng of Welsh women and girls, in their national costumes of red cloaks and black hats, came out from a neighboring hilltop to watch the fighting which they feared would take place. The French commander mistook them for a strong force of British grenadiers, and forthwith volunteered to surrender. The offer was, of course, accepted, and the whole French company was locked up in Pembroke Castle before the mistake was discovered.

To give the tale a suitable romantic ending, it is to be added that some of the Frenchmen made their escape through the connivance of some of the very girls who had scared them into becoming prisoners. So Fishguard first became notable at the height of Anglo-French hostilities, and now it returns to the world's gaze at the time of an entente cordiale between the two countries.

Lucky Man.

"Young man," said a rich and pompous old man, "I was not always as well off as I am now. I did not always ride in a motor car of my own. When I first started in life I walked." "You were lucky," retorted the young man. "When I first started I had to crawl. It took me a long time to learn to walk!"

Like a Clear.

"A play," remarked the theatrical manager, "is like a clear."
"What's the answer?" inquired the innocent reporter.
"If it's good," explained the manager, "every one wants a box; and if it's bad, no amount of puffing will make it draw."

Eggs Instead of Candles.

"It is my husband's birthday. He is just 35," said the actress to the manager. "Don't you think you could do something for him?"
"Sure thing," replied the manager. "I'll get somebody in the audience to throw thirty-five eggs at him."—Yonkers Statesman.

The Label Language.
"There's a language in hotel labels, the same as in stamps or flowers," said a courier. "All over Europe the hotel porters paste the hotel labels on your trunks in such a way that the porters in future towns will know what sort of a tipper you are."
