D. Reed was in from the farm Wednesday of last week and made us a pleasant call. He informs us that the patent upon the castor and bracket with which the common rocker is quickly changed into a very convenient invalid's chair, had been granted him by the U. S. patent office, upon which the old gentleman is to be congratulated, and we sincerely hope that he may succeed well in disposing of the Patent right, either through sale or on the royalty plan as he may elect, as this is a meritorious device and should be in many homes where invalids are forced to get along with contrivances not nearly so convenient, and, in many cases costing many times over what a set of those casters would.

THE ENGLISHMAN'S BATH.

Not So Very Long Ago It Was An Unknown Institution.

We boast ourselves a cleanly people and are apt to scorn the foreigner who does not daily perform the ritual of the tub. Yet, the British Medical Journal points out, it is not so long ago since we had the reputation of being an exceptionally dirty people. In the year 1800 there was not a single private house in London provided with a bathroom.

A witness stated before the health commission about the middle of the last century that the only two occasions on which one of the laboring classes was washed all over was immediately after birth and after death.

Even at the present day our contemporary doubts if dirtier people could be found anywhere in the world than among our lower classes. "A French workman would be ashamed to wear the clothes in which the British laborer goes to his daily work. There is nothing that tramps who apply at workhouses think a more brutal tyranny than the enforced bath."

In the middle ages, we are reminded, our dirt and squalor were the theme of comment by foreign visitors. Three centuries ago what most struck a Portuguese traveler in England was the fact that the English gentry never washed. Erasmus has left a picture of the dirt that prevailed in the houses of noblemen.

It is not difficult from this to imagine what the state of things must have been among the poorer classes. At one time both men and women who were careful of their complexions cleaned their faces with a dry white linen cloth, because it was believed that washing the face with water made it more susceptible to cold in winter and to tan in summer. The story of Lady Mary Wortley Montagu's hands is too well known to be repeated. Johnson said he had no passion for clean linen, and even the fine gentlemen of his day were far from scrupulously clean in their persons.—Westminster Gazette.

RATING THE GIRLS.

Terms Young Naval Officers Use In Fixing Feminine Beauty.

The younger officers in the navy, and the gallant young midshipmen especially, have a method of their own for recording feminine beauty, and they use it on many occasions. This is a system of estimating the attractiveness of a visitor by a sliding scale from 2.5 to 4, which is the system of marking at the Naval academy.

One particularly attractive girl was walking along the deck of one of Uncle Sam's big warships on a day when it was open to visitors when she overheard two midshipmen say: "I'll give her a 3.5, anyway. She comes nearer to a 4 than anything I've seen yet."

Of course she did not understand what this conversation was about. If she had she would have felt rightfully flattered, as a 3.5 is an excellent mark and one rarely given.

A 2.5 means passable. That is the lowest mark that will pass at the academy. If a girl is attractive and jolly, but without any particularly striking beauty, she is put down as a 2.5.

Before a girl can be spoken of as deserving of a 3 she must be very pretty indeed. To merit a 3.5 her beauty must be striking. It is seldom any girl, no matter how beautiful or attractive, merits a 4. This is the perfect mark, the very best that can be obtained. It is seldom given by midshipmen to more than one girl in his whole career in the navy.—New York Herald.

An Eye Opener.

Always have a glass medicine dropper and a little of rosewater in the medicine chest and in your traveling bag. Then when you get a foreign body in your eye you will be spared much pain and discomfort if the following very simple and harmless method is pursued: Put into the medicine dropper six drops of the rose water. Pull down the lower lid and float the liquid on the surface of the injured eye. After the rosewater has been in the eye for a few seconds use the eye medicine dropper to suck out the liquid, and the foreign matter will come with it.—National Magazine.

Diplomacy.

"At the time that Frederick II. used to sup with his French philosophers he demanded of them one day, "What would you do if you were the king of Prussia?"

Every guest tried a flattering and witty rejoinder. When the Marquis d'Argens' turn came he said: "Sire, what would I do? I would sell my kingdom and acquire a small province in France."

An Aggravation.

"I wish," said Mr. Gfowcher, "that Mr. Babber wouldn't use that phrase, "Well, to make a long story short.""

"Why?"

"It invariably serves merely to make the story that many words longer."—Boston Spoken-Review.

Human Faces.

Dreadful limits are set in nature to the powers of dissimulation. Truth tyrannizes over the unwilling members of the body. As never lie, it is said, no man need be deceived who will study the changes of expression.—Emerson.

Untenable.

"By the way, why do you permit your children to believe in fairies?"

"I can't tell them there are no fairies had then expect them to believe in microbes."—Exchange.

The Question of Calendars

for 1913 is up to the business men of the town at this early date and many beautiful designs are being shown, but the most attractive ones we have seen are being shown by Armstrong & Dean, the photographers. They are offering designs prepared by the largest Novelty House in America and they are beauties of themselves, but the most attractive feature from an advertising standpoint is that the pictures are local views made at home and are much more desirable than lithographs of unknown places. This firm offers to furnish any view that may be desired that can be secured within any reasonable distance from town and this with the quality of the samples shown has secured for them several large orders.
