

Church News

Next Sunday evening, in the Methodist church at 8 o'clock, Mrs. Eva Wheeler delivers the lecture she has been giving with great acceptance in the past months throughout Oregon. Wherever she has been the papers have spoken highly of the message. Her subject is "The Double Coronation." Wit, pathos, logic and eloquence are blended in the address. All members of the W. C. T. U. are especially invited to be present. The service at 11 o'clock will be in charge of L. A. Ralston. Bible School at 9:45 a. m. and Epworth League devotional meeting at 7 p. m.

The meetings conducted by the Church of God one half block west of the Depot on Main St. are still going on.

We extend a cordial invitation to all to come and hear the Gospel of Jesus Christ that saves men and women from their actual transgressions.

Justifies them by faith and gives them peace with god, purifies the hearts of believers by a second definite instantaneous work of grace unsought in the heart by the Holy Ghost, heals their bodies, and unifies them in the one Bible church. Meeting every night at 8 o'clock. Sunday at 11. a. m.

That it will be as easy for the school pupils of Cottage Grove to send exhibits to the state fair as to the county fair since there will be no charges on the Southern Pacific was the statement made here Thursday by Field Contest Manager C. C. Thompson of Salem. It was formerly announced that freight on children's exhibits would have to be prepaid but State Superintendent Alderman has made arrangements for this red tape to be done away with by the local school principal or the county superintendent shipping the exhibits in his name to the state fair. Although the grange fair comes the same week as the state fair, any child with a garden may easily have produce enough to send both places.

Prof. Showerman Gives Lecture

University of Oregon, July 27, 1912.—"I believe in and sympathize with the efforts we are making to bring education, whether cultural or industrial, within the reach of all the people," said Prof. Grant Showerman, of the University of Wisconsin, in his concluding lecture at the University of Oregon Summer School today. "But I do not for a minute believe that industrial and vocational education should be allowed to take the place of liberal training, or to crowd it out, or that our efforts to minister to the needs of the masses should result in our neglect of the training of our young people who have intellectual talent above the ordinary. The state should afford every possible encouragement of higher education. This is its duty, or its privilege—its duty because intellectual talent has as just a claim to the fostering hand of the state as the more ordinary talents; its privilege, because if our generation is to be useful to posterity, or even known, it will be so by reason of its transmitting to future generations not merely the memory of its achievements and discoveries, but of the emotional experience which begot them. Those nations of the past which command our admiration and stir our idealism are the nations which produced great leaders in literature and the arts, and thus gave us not only a knowledge of their times, but preserved for our inspiration the emotional ideals which made their times great.

PARIS HAS A SWEET TOOTH.

A Poet to Whom Candy Brought Better Results Than His Rimes.

The best business in Paris is said to be that of the well established and popular confectioner, and this fact has been recognized, it is said, since the days of Napoleon III. and his natural brother, the Duke de Morny. "The Duke," says Le Cri de Paris, "had a weakness for writing vaudevilles and often asked the counsel of Siraudin, who was a skillful collaborator of Clairville.

"But the theater brought no riches to Siraudin. One day Morny said to him: 'My friend, I want to see thee in a better situation. The idea comes to me to put thee in commerce. What dost thou say to it?'

"Siraudin received this proposition joyfully, but what line of trade should he choose? Morny and Siraudin set out on the principle that the best business was evidently the one in which there were fewest failures. They conscientiously scanned the bulletin of declarations of bankruptcy. All the trades were represented there—all except one; that was the confectioner, and Morny gave to Siraudin the necessary capital to establish himself as a merchant of bonbons. Siraudin ingeniously conciliated the lyric muse. He wrapped his pralines, his sugar plums and his chocolates in kiss papers, each inclosing his printed verses. Morny did better than establish him. He frequented his shop. As the duke was the king of the world of fashion, he drew all Paris by his example, and the fortune of the poet-confectioner Siraudin was made."

THE STARS APPEARED.

He Only Wanted to See One, but He Was Introduced to a Cluster.

He had been celebrating, not wisely, but too well, and getting obstreperous and noisy and looking for a fight he was tackled by a policeman who in plain clothes was on his way home. The drunken one showed fight and was indignant that an apparently private citizen should try to arrest him. "Show me your star!" he demanded. "Don't believe you're a cop at all. Won't go with you till I see your star," and he aimed a mandlin blow at the policeman.

There was a scuffle and a fight, short lived, but strenuous, and the drunken man was landed in the police station, where he stayed all night. In the morning it was a disheveled and torn wreck that appeared before the magistrate and who listened to the policeman relate the trouble he had in getting him to the station house.

"He wanted to fight me all the way to the station, your honor. He kept pulling back and trying to trip me and yelling: 'Show me your star! I won't go unless you show me your star.'"

"And," asked the magistrate gently, "did you show him your star?"

"Your honor," interrupted the prisoner, "he clouted me on the head, and I saw the star—I saw several of them, enough to go around the entire force!"
