Essay on Umbrellas.

An umbrella is a circulating medium which passes from hand to hand like money.

Umbrellas are designed to keep the rain off the wearer's hat and deposit it on his shoulders. They are made of cloth stretched tightly over steel ribs. A man may break a rib or even have it shot away and still live to become president, but when an umbrella breaks a rib it is good only to lend to a personal friend.

Umbrellas are so made that they can be opened and closed with great ease except when the owner is trying to get into or out of a street car. When an umbrella is brought into the house, it is folded up neatly and stood in a corner to drain. On a wet day enough water is carried into the houses of this nation by umbrellas to fill the big lock of the Panama canal, says George Fitch.

Umbrellas were invented in England many years ago, and when the first umbrella owner appeared on the street he was stoned by the indignant populace, which foresaw the trouble it was going to have keeping its eyes free from the noxious things in bad weather.

Wearing an umbrella requires as much skill as tacking a ship in a heavy wind. An experienced navigator can carry a large umbrella through a gale of wind and rain successfully, but the green hand is compelled to push it before him and mow down pedestrians in rows.

Umbrellas are made in great variety and numbers, but their cost is unknown. Very few people pay for umbrellas. As a rule a man's umbrellas are the assets of his absent-mindedness. Umbrellas and lead pencils are two articles which can be stolen without endangering the reputation. The easiest way to obtain an umbrella is to step up to a total stranger and claim the one he is carrying. Ten to one he will apologize as he hands it over.

Somewhere in this world are the devoted few who buy the umbrellas for the devoted millions, but no one has as yet started an agitation to erect a monument to their memory.

An Aggressive Citizen.

The man who advertises is fearless. He courts the light. He dares and sundry to put him to the test. "This is what I offer," he says in effect. "Can you beat it? Can you do better elsewhere? Make comparisons and then do business with me only if you find it is to your advantage."

There is nothing hidden about the advertiser. He stands up for himself, for his goods, for his reputation, for his town. He wants everybody to know him, to know his methods of business and his manner of treating customers.

This makes it safe to do business with him. Having spent much money making his name known, he cannot afford to have it tarnished, and he will go much more than halfway in an effort to correct a misunderstanding that is not of his making. He wants to tell more than the bare truth, to do more than what is really square.

Deal with advertisers for a square deal.—Ex.

What Other Governors Say.

The Governor of Iowa: "The less liquor sold, the better morals."

Governor Folk of Missouri: "The Sunday closing of saloons has reduced Sunday crime sixty per cent."

The Governor of Georgia: "I will attend no banquet during my term of office at which wine is served."

Governor Bush of North Dakota: "We have had prohibition so long in North Dakota that in some counties there are no jails."

Governor of Texas: "The saving in court expenses from the decrease in crime is believed to offset the loss of revenue from closing saloons."

Governor of Oklahoma: "It will cost to enforce prohibition five per cent of what it will cost to punish crimes, keep orphans, paupers and criminals that the whiskey traffic creates."

The Governor of Kansas: "More than half the territory of the United States, and more than one-third of the people, are now under the dominion of prohibition."—Lend-a-Hand.
