Just mention the Leader to your neighbor. Tell him it only costs $1.50, and it is a real home paper for Southern Lane county. All the news of the surrounding neighborhoods and none of their personal or political scraps.

Mrs. Margaret Gray, a reader of great ability, and Florence Crawford, pianist, in Estella Franklin Gray's company at the Arcade Saturday night, March 21, are artists in their line, and help to make up a very strong company.

NEW GROCERY STORE OPENING.

R. E. Short, for some years with the Rees-Wallace Co., in this city, is opening up a new grocery store at the corner of Seventh street and Washington Avenue. Nothing could be truer than that the store is new—from the scales on the counter to the topmost can on the highest shelf.

Mr. Short's experience and knowledge of the business is shown in the splendid line of goods he has chosen, and his arrangement of his stock is attractive and artistic.

Mr. Short extends a hearty invitation to his friends to visit him and look over his store and he is convinced that his goods and prices will prove irresistible to the particular and economical buyer.

L. O. Armstrong, the noted humorist, author, explorer, farmer and all around out of doors man, will lecture at the High school, Cottage Grove, 8 p. m., March 26. The lecturer is both interesting and beautiful; interesting in the way the story is told, beautiful in the way it is illustrated. The lecture has had a wide experience and gives the facts of the Canadian northwest in such a vivid manner and true realism that it is a pleasure to listen.

Fruit and Garden Land—10 acres, all but one-half acre in cultivation, river bottom, 3 acres young orchard, 4-room house, barn, chicken house, two good wells. Mile and a quarter south of Cottage Grove. Only $2,600. Inquire of Leader.

Mrs. C. C. Cruson and Mrs. J. C. Johnson will entertain the Panama club at the home of the former next Friday.

Mrs. Archie Thompson gave her little daughter Avonalle, a pleasant birthday party last Friday afternoon to which eight little girls were invited guests, it being Miss Avonalle's eighth birthday anniversary. Games were introduced and excellent refreshments were served at the Elite confectionery consisting of ice cream, cake and fruit punch.

The Sunday (Portland) Journal says: "Mrs. Ralph Robinson, mezzo-soprano, will be presented in recital soon, by Harold Hurlbut. Mrs. Robinson was engaged as soloist for the production of "Everywoman," which was given March 6, at Cottage Grove. She made a most successful appearance, her beautiful voice, excellent diction and artistry eliciting much applause, and was forced to respond to several encores." Mrs. Robinson was formerly Miss Anna Rhoda of this city.

The Silver tea given by Mesdames David Griggs and C Frost at the home of the former last Friday afternoon for the benefit of the Ladies Aid of the Baptist church, was a very successful affair. Mrs. Mills entertained with a few selections on the victrola, and Mrs. Cobb gave several instrumental piano solos. St. Patrick's day color scheme was prettily carried out in the decorations of daffodils and ferns and in the refreshments of green jello with whipped cream, cakes and tea.

The Story of "Mrs. Rescue"

By M. QUAD
Copyright, 1914, by Associated Literary Press.

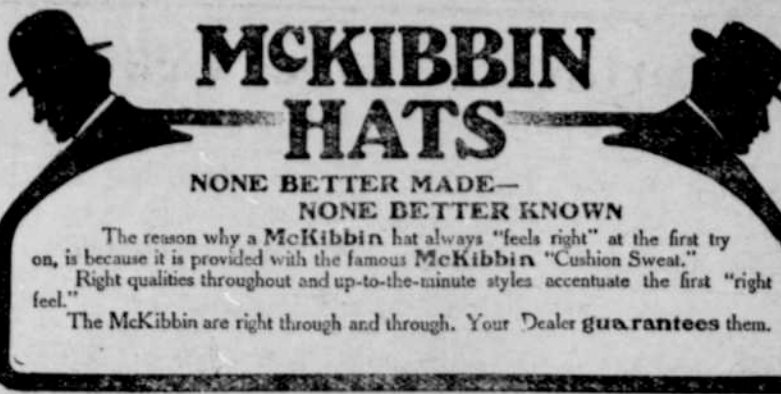

We were between the Azores and Madeira, bound for a port in the West Indies, in the American ship Ben Joyce when a curious thing happened one morning about an hour before daylight. I was digging my eyes and fighting away sleep when a curious sound from over the bows caught my ear. As I listened to the noise the only thing I could compare it to was the noses of sharks bumping up against a small boat. It would have been ridiculous to call to the mate and give him any such wild explanation, but I finally called his attention to the curious noises and left the cause to his own perception.

"There's a raft or a boat out there," he said after a moment, "and the noise may be made by oars. I'll burn a port fire."

The port fire lighted up the sea for a hundred feet around, and the first thing we saw was a ship's boat within forty feet of us on the port bow. In the bottom of the boat were two human figures, and one of them was a woman, and all around the boat the sea was alive with sharks. As soon as we caught sight of the boat the mate ran to call the captain. By the time the captain arrived the boat had drifted right down against us, and one of the crew lowered himself into her and made fast the painter. Then I got down to assist him, and we passed up the bodies—the man first. We might just as well have dropped him into the sea, for he had been dead for twenty-four hours at least. He was recognized by all as a sailor. As we picked up the woman, having not a doubt that she was dead also, she moved and uttered a groan. We had her on board after a couple of minutes, and the small boat, which was a captain's gig, new and without a name, was later hoisted up.

The woman awoke to find herself aboard of a strange ship, with strange men around her. She was a handsome, well formed woman, English in looks and speech and about thirty years of age. Her apparel was fine and costly, but she wore no jewelry and had neither a purse nor a cardcase. When asked how she came to be at sea in the gig, what her name was, if she had visited Madeira or the Azores, if she lived in England, she could tell nothing. She began a new life when she opened her eyes in the cabin of the Joyce. After three or four days both cabin and fo'c'stack came to the same conclusion, which was this: The sailor must have been rowing the woman off to a ship or from a ship to shore at some of the islands.

That's the way we figured it out, and it looked reasonable enough, and, of course, the right thing to do was to leave the woman at Trinidad and report the case as widely as possible. Queerly enough, she fought and baffled this plan. Our captain was a good looking man, and, feeling that she owed him her life and doubtless being rather romantic by nature, what did she do but fall in love with him! That is only half the story. He fell head over heels in love with her. The position was most embarrassing for him, however. All of us agreed that the woman was or had been a wife, though she had no finger ring to prove it. I think he saw things as an honorable man should, and yet he could not help loving her. When we reached Trinidad he notified the English consul, placed the woman in the household of a friend and then sailed for the port of New York.

The story of our picking up the living and the dead was published far and wide. The publication of that story all over the world did not solve the mystery. No husband came forward; no relatives wrote.

When three years had elapsed and still no news had come the two were married. The woman had not recovered one single point of memory. She was a stranger to herself. She had no country, no relatives, no name except by chance. After marriage the captain left the sea and went into the ship chandlery business in Brooklyn. One evening two years after the wedding the captain of an English tramp steamer just in called to ask for some information. He complained of not being well, and, one thing leading to another, he finally related a tale of woe. Several years before, while his ship was at the Azores, his wife, who had been sent ashore in the morning, attempted to return about nightfall, just as a squall was coming up. The boat upset, and the occupants were lost. They found neither the boat nor the bodies, but there was no doubt of the calamity. The loss of the wife so affected the husband that he was ill of brain fever for months, and he had never read a line of her rescue in mid-ocean. There was the husband at last, and Captain Clark realized that he had rights before him. They were alone in the office, and perhaps he thought of killing the man who had come to break up his happy home. It was only a step to the edge of the ship, and perhaps he thought of suicide as the best way out. The climax was a curious one, but in keeping. The strange captain, who had given his name as Burke, was looking at Captain Clark in a puzzled way and wondering why he should be so affected by the story when a yacht anchor swinging from a beam above his head perted its fastenings and fell upon him and crushed him to the floor, and, though he did not die for two days, he never spoke again.
