BRITISH SHIP SUNK BY TURKISH TORPEDO

London.—In the first naval battle of the war between Turkish and British war craft, 100 of the crew of the British transport Manito were reported to have been drowned and a Turkish torpedo boat destroyed, in official dispatches to the admiralty.

The battle was fought off the island of Chios, near the Gulf of Smyrna and about 100 miles south of the entrance to the Dardanelles. It is believed here that the transport was torpedoed and sunk after she had landed British troops on the coast of Asia Minor.

Three torpedoes were shot at the British transport, according to dispatches to the admiralty. All missed fire. The light cruiser Minerva, which had participated in the bombardment of Smyrna, gave chase and forced the torpedo boat ashore in Kalamout Bay, Chios Island. The Turkish war craft was destroyed and her crew made prisoners.
