GREAT FLOOD DISASTERS.

Two Hundred Killed and Drowned—Great Distress Among the People of Kansas

ST. JOSEPH, Mo., June 1.—A telephone message from Kansas City, says that 200 people were drowned at that place Sunday afternoon by the crashing of four bridges across the Kaw River by a big tank of the Standard Oil Company. The tank, which had been surrounded by the raging water, broke loose and swept against the bridges, upon which there were many people watching the flood. The bridges, with the exception of that of the Missouri Pacific Railroad, were crushed like kindling wood, and 200 people destroyed.

The flood has rendered 20,000 people in Kansas City, Kan., homeless. The town is cut off from communication with Kansas City, Mo., and relief is being sent from Leavenworth. Colonel Minor, commanding the post of Fort Leavenworth, has sent troops and tents from the post to assist in caring for the homeless, and to aid in the rescue work at Kansas City, Kan., where conditions are constantly growing worse. Many people are in houses that are surrounded by water and unless they have help soon, many of them will perish.

The Kaw River above Kansas City has fallen within the last eight hours but the Missouri is making matters worse by rising. Many relief parties and privates went to Kansas City, from Fort Leavenworth.

KANSAS CITY, Mo., June 1.—As far as reported 422 lives have been lost in the great floods which are raging in Kansas. The waters are steadily rising and many more deaths are expected. The loss in property amounts to tens of millions of dollars. Topeka, Armourdale and Argentine are the towns suffering most. Great damage is also being done in Kansas City.
