

little less than profanity to expose to the gaze of the cold and the unsympathizing world. Let us point to the names of a few of our great and good men who not only belonged to secret orders but practiced their teachings. Newton, the Christian philosopher, the father of natural science. To him whose voice first sounded the alarm of war in our eastern colonies, whose own arm bore the first banner that ever dipped its crimson folds of blood of the foes of American freedom. The patriotic, the lamented Warren; to him the sworn enemy of kings whose bold hand first signed the great pledge of American independence the venerable Hancock. And to him a brighter star than ever glittered in the coronet of Greece, a brighter star than ever glittered in the coronet of Rome; and the brightest star that glitters in the diadem of nations. To him the first in war, the first in peace and the first in the hearts of his countrymen—Washington. And to him who left the land of his fathers, the wealth he inherited and in the darkest and most perilous hours of our Revolutionary fortunes sought our standard and followed it until victory rested upon its eagles and then returned to shake the rotten and crumbling thrones of Europe with the notes of freedom—Lafayette. To Franklin, the patriot who, in the day of danger stood foremost in his country's council. To the learned and venerable Marshalls, Clinton, Livingston, Rittenhouse and a host of others that we could name of the greatest men of earth that have been active members of some secret order.

Brethren, members of an Order which time has rendered venerable, which virtue has consecrated, which genius has made immortal, let us reverently render up the homage due to his Omnipotence.

As we look around us, and behold the great family of man pursuing their thousand devious ways, let us remember—having one common origin, destined to one common end—and as our hearts expand with the usual sympathy, let its impulses be regarded as the dictates of duty. And let us, each for ourselves, remember that lesson which teaches "that the path of virtue is the way to happiness." This simple truth is the great result of all the deductions of religion and philosophy; and while it is your duty as men, it is also your duty as Odd Fellows, to recognize its force. Follow them in the path of virtue; let your aspirations to heaven be grateful as the incense; your love warm as its flame; your charity diffusive as its fragrance. Let your hearts be pure as the altar, and your conduct as acceptable as the offering, and thus you will become pillars of wisdom, strength and beauty, adorning and upholding the majestic edifice of Odd Fellowship—pillars upon which it will continue to stand until that time when, amid, the universal wreck, the dazzling brightness of the day and the deep blue of the en-purpled night shall fade—when those who can meet the test of the Great Grand Master of the Universe shall be clothed in the garments of immortality, and be permitted to enter that lodge not made with hands eternal in the heavens.

[Delivered on the 85th, anniversary of Odd-fellowship in the I. O. O. F. Hall, Cottage Grove, April 26, 1904.]
