I got a whole lot of faith in my fellow man; but, all de same, I don't lak t' see Brudder Simpson put his thumb so fah down on the inside of de collection basket, Mistah Jackson.—Baltimore News.

Coalless Switzerland.

With a population of 3,000,000 Switzerland is without any coal supply of her own. None of her rivers is navigable, and all her coal imports have to be brought in by rail, which makes it very expensive. Her coal bill is about $12,500,000 a year.

In order to make her outlay for fuel as economical as possible the government has decided to establish a federal testing station, attached to the leading institution for technical instruction at Zurich. At this station every kind of fuel used in the little republic is to be scientifically tested to determine its exact heat producing value, which will be made known to the public through periodical publications by the government. It is intended to reform the whole coal trade by substituting heat producing value for weight as the basis of its price per ton.

Our consul at Zurich, in reporting this scheme, states that its originator is an American, Dr. E. J. Constan, from New York, at present professor of chemistry in the Swiss Federal Polytechnic.
