

Arrr, Matey!

Nataliah Vanoutryve looks at her mother, Jess Vanoutryve, through the "pirate spy glass" she made during Thursday afternoon's "Pirate Crafts" activity at Dallas Public Library. Children could make spy glasses, hooks, and pirate or parrot paper bag puppets at one of the library's many spring break activities meant to keep the youngsters busy when school was not in session. Attendance at the activities largely depended on the weather. On rainy days, more children participated in library events. On sunny days, like Thursday afternoon, participation was reduced to only a handful of children.

Survey shows good opinions of Dallas

By Jolene Guzman

DALLAS — Not much has changed in the way citizens feel about living in the city of Dallas in the last two years.

That is according to recently released results of the city's biennial (every two years) survey.

Advanced Marketing Research of Eugene conducted the telephone survey in January, quizzing more than 400 citizens.

The survey asked citizens to rank city services and departments on a 1 to 5 scale, with 5 being the highest. Many of the 2015 responses mirrored those given in 2013, with small declines in public safety and citizens' opinion about whether Dallas is a good place to live. The latter measure remained high, though, at 4.5, slipping from 4.7 in 2013.

The biggest change in the survey was the use of the Rickreall Creek Trail System. In 2013, 76 percent of respondents said they didn't use the trail. That shifted in the 2015 survey to 56 percent of those interviewed said they had spent time on the trail system.

The city was especially pleased to see that because it has been planning on expanding the trail on the east side of town, as well as building a bridge from Central Bark — the city's dog park — to the trail near the Dallas Aquatic Center.

"That's super exciting, but other than that, there are not a lot of swings," Dallas City Manager Ron Fogg said, noting that is positive as the city wants to build consistency.

When asked if citizens thought the city was spending taxpayer money wisely, Dallas was given one of its worst marks, 3.4, falling slightly from 3.5 in 2013.

Lower rankings are expected on that measure, but Fogg said he would like to find ways to make Dallas' score improve in future surveys.

"We would like to see those go up," he said. "We are trying to spend money in the best possible way we can and get the best bang for our buck."

Timber payment bill passes House

By Jolene Guzman

POLK COUNTY — A two-year reauthorization of the Secure Rural Schools program — widely known as county timber payments — has passed the U.S. House of Representatives and is slated for a vote in the U.S. Senate, likely later this month.

U.S. Rep. Greg Walden (R-Hood River) negotiated to have the reauthorization attached to a bill that reforms how doctors are paid under Medicare. It passed the House on a 392-37 vote Thursday.

If passed in the Senate and signed into law, the reauthorization would provide funding for 33 Oregon counties, including Polk.

"This two-year extension gives us time to continue work on a long-term plan to reform federal forest policy to grow jobs in the woods, improve forest health, and provide certainty for essential local services like schools and roads,"

Walden said in a statement.

The amount of money Polk County might see is far from final, but Polk County Administrator Greg Hansen said "rough estimates" have the county receiving $400,000 in the first year and $700,000 in the second if the legislation passes. He added just when payments will be made — 45 days after it is signed, according to the current version of the legislation — is in question too.

The county began its budget hearings Monday and is required to adopt a budget before July 1.

Polk County also is seeking to pass a levy that would bring in $2.25 million and provide for 22 jobs in public safety departments. The estimated amount in timber funding coming to Polk County wouldn't come close to that much, but the Board of Commissioners has said it would levy a lower amount if timber payments were to come to through.
