Timber: Two-year extension of O&C money provides no long-term solution

 Two separate plans, one created by Wyden and another by his House counterparts Reps. Peter DeFazio, Greg Walden and Kurt Schrader, tried to offer proposals increasing harvests on federally-owned O&C (Oregon and California Railroad) lands in Oregon. However, those plans were not able to clear votes in both chambers, and it appears to have lost traction.

Pope said legislators may be taking a different approach to finding a timber management solution, but just what that entails and how much financial support will come to the county is yet to be seen.

"Walden and Schrader's offices are optimistic," said Pope, who was in Washington, D.C. last week. "They've been quick to tell us when they are not."

Pope said the strategy used to pass this latest extension, attaching it to a bill with bipartisan support, isn't likely to happen again, so counties should view these as the last payments they will receive.

That has been said before, Pope acknowledged, but pointed out another pattern when it comes to timber payment extensions.

"Each time the amount gets smaller, and it's not something that we can plan on," he said. "You can't budget with this. We still have to find long-term solutions."

Pope said while Oregon's delegation searches for those solutions, he's glad to see some assistance offered to counties.

"The entire Congress acted in a way that was positive," Pope said. "It's not a solution, but at least it's engaging with local government to help bridge the gap."

Fuller: Plans for a long career at WOU

 He knows there will be challenges ahead, and notes that it is up to the students, faculty and administration of Western to make sure WOU is successful.

"I'm a student of continuous improvement," Fuller said. "I think we can make things better all the time. I think, as a leader, if you're transparent about that expectation, people will participate in and share ideas in ways that are pre-ty exciting and innovative."

He plans to finish out his career at Western, which he doesn't expect to end anytime soon.

"I hope to be really successful," Fuller said. "We're starting with a two-year contract, but it's renewable. I plan to make that possible. I'm in good health; I enjoy work. I'm convinced I will have a very long career."

Fuller was chosen as WOU's next president by the Oregon State Board of Higher Education upon recommendation from Western's board of trustees — a board which won't assume governance over the university until July 1. A presidential search committee helped narrow down the more than 45 applications received for the position. Four candidates were invited to the university for interviews, tours and forums between April 1 and April 8.

Fuller will take the helm from President Mark Weiss, who will retire June 30.
