

Rates to go up at Dallas pool

DALLAS — The Dallas City Council made a minor change to the Dallas Aquatic Center admission rates at its meeting Monday night.

The council approved a resolution that increased the family rate from $14 to $16.

The new rate still provides a discount off regular admission rates for families of four ($19-$20), but also allows the center to collect an additional $10,000 per year.

"It's still very cheap, and it's a very good deal," said Councilor Kelly Gabliks, the chairwoman of the council's administration committee, which recommended the change to the council.

The council, serving as the Dallas Urban Renewal Agency Board, also approved a change to the urban renewal budget for 2015-16 to help cover unanticipated costs for a streetscape project slated for the current fiscal year.

Bids on the project, which spans the south side of Mill Street from Main Street to the mid-block alley, exceeded estimates by $20,000 to $25,000.

About $50,000 was budgeted this year for the project, though the total cost now is estimated to be more than $80,000, including landscape materials and lighting installation that were not part of the project bid.

To cover the extra cost, agency staff recommended the board revise the 2015-16 urban renewal budget, taking $35,000 from contingency funds.

The change will allow the agency to pay for the project out of the current budget and next year's, and leave about $132,000 in contingency.

Jason Locke, the city's economic development director, said the increase was mainly due to construction costs in general going up.

A resolution adopting the agency budget will be before the board at its June 15 meeting.

In other business, the council:

- Held a public hearing on the city's 2015-16 budget at which no one testified.

A resolution adopting the budget will be before council at its June 15 meeting.
