Indy man sentenced to 16 years for rape

DALLAS — An Independence man was sentenced to 16 years in prison in Polk County Circuit Court Monday after being convicted on several charges of rape and coercion. James Everett Kerne, 38, of Independence was booked into the Polk County Jail in December 2014 on multiple counts of first-degree rape and coercion involving a former South Salem High School student.

Kerne first met the victim when he was an instructional assistant at South Salem High School and she was a student, according to the Polk County District Attorney's Office. After she graduated, he began sending her threatening emails.

Kerne also created an on-line ruse, claiming gang members would harm her family if she did not enter into a sexual relationship with him.

A jury convicted Kerne of 10 counts each of first-degree rape and coercion in April and Polk County Circuit Court Judge Monte Campbell issued the sentence, which included 20 years of post-prison supervision in addition to Kerne's prison time.

"On some of the tables, I would be willing to bet the wood on them was 15 years old," Lines said. "His timing was actually really good. It's very beneficial to the community."

Dindinger wasn't reluctant to put in the hours and labor to finish his project, arriving in the park at 6:30 a.m. and sometimes not leaving until 9:30 p.m. the week of June 8 to disassemble and reassemble the tables.

He didn't seem to mind the extra work.

In fact, he's glad the project will have an impact on more people than his original idea.

"Hopefully they will get good use out of the tables," he said.

Center: Infant-toddler care for teen moms, dads

The project's contractor, Dalke Construction Co. Inc., has completed the remodeling of what used to be the alternative education building kitty-corner from Central High School, 1601 Monmouth St., Independence, ahead of schedule.

The building had to be significantly remodeled to accommodate the health center, adding dental and exam rooms and sound-proof rooms for mental health help.

On the other side of the building, the infant-toddler space had to be completely redone, with antiquated lockers and flooring replaced with modern amenities.

"We have a good bunch of partners here," said Dan Harrold, superintendent of the project.

The center will provide infant-toddler care for babies aged 6 weeks to 3 years. The Research Institute at Western Oregon University — formerly known as the Teaching Research Institute — will provide the child care for babies and toddlers, Ingrid Amerson, director of TRI, said.

"We can provide that continuity of care for these young children," Amerson said. "They'll be working with, for the most part, the same teachers. We want to create that environment where children can feel safe and comfortable."

The child care component will allow teen parents to return to the classroom and complete their high school education. In the Monmouth and Independence ZIP codes, there are more than 100 teen mothers between the ages of 11 and 19, said Brent DeMoe, Polk County Family and Community Outreach.

Efforts are underway to recruit those youths back to school, Amerson said. The infant-toddler center will be open from 7:30 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. beginning Sept. 8, the first day of school.

Teen parents will have first dibs on slots for their kids, but if spaces are available, the child care facility will be open to the community.

The facility was paid for through state funding and grants. It will operate through Salem Health, Capitol Dental and Polk County Health Services.

Although no one intends to make any money from the center, fees generated should allow it to pay for itself, said Buzz Brazeau, Central School District superintendent.

The center will be run on an opt-out policy.

That is, anyone registered at Central schools will be automatically allowed to use the center unless parents opt out their children.

Forms to opt-out will be included in school registration forms with each student, Brazeau said.

How will it work?

For elementary school children, parents will be called if the child is not feeling well, as normal. For middle and high school aged children, they will be allowed to ride their bike or walk to the center. If their parents have not opted them out, they will be able to receive treatment or get a referral and go back to class.

The center will accept insurance programs, including Oregon Health Plan.

County health services will be available across the street at the old district office to help enroll people in OHP if needed.
