James Harvey Bones

Dec. 10, 1932 – Dec. 25, 2015
James Harvey Bones, 83, of Salem died Dec. 25 in Portland.

He was born in Turner to Hollis Bones and Edna Elston Bones.

Harvey was raised in Brownsville and graduated from Brownsville High School at the age of 15 as class valedictorian. He then attended Oregon State University for one year before starting work shoveling sawdust for the local sawmill. He rode saddle bronc as a young man until several broken ribs convinced him that an early retirement from rodeo was in order.

Harvey married his wife, Florence Alice Johnson, of Redmond, and shortly returned to the sawmill industry, helping to build the mill in Maupin, which ultimately became Wasco County's largest employer.

Mt. Fir Lumber Company included the mills in Tygh Valley, Independence, Grants Pass, as well as log yards and wood chip facilities throughout the Pacific Northwest. Mt. Fir chip plant was the first tenant of the Port of The Dalles.

Harvey held many industry leadership roles, including a board position on the National Railroad Tie Association, and served as president of the Western Forestry Products board.

He was named the 1981 Business Leader of the Year by the Monmouth-Independence Chamber of Commerce and was named Oregon Business Leader of the Year by Associated Oregon Industries in 1982.

In the course of his career, he rose from pulling green chain to president and CEO of Mt. Fir Lumber Company, exemplifying the American dream.

After closing the sawmills due to the spotted owl issue, Harvey reorganized the chipping facility in The Dalles that remained in business until 2002, when a wildfire burned the plant to the ground and closed the business.

Harvey's lifetime obsession with golf brought him many friends and great experiences. He lived nearly 20 years on the 12th fairway at Creekside Country Club in Salem.

He was preceded in death by his wife of 62 years, Florence in 2014.

Survivors include his children, Susan (David) Huntington, of Seaside, Steve (Karen) Bones, of Prineville, Brian (Carol) Bones, of Tigard, and Larry (Cheryl) Bones, of Rancho Cucamonga, Calif.; sister, Irene Bennett, of Corvallis; six grandchildren; five great-grandchildren; and extended family.
