

OBITUARIES

Richard Kindwall

Jan. 20, 1941 – Jan. 13, 2016
Richard Clarence Kindwall, 74, of Dallas died Jan. 13 in Lake Havasu City, Ariz.

Richard, who most knew as "Dick," was born to Clarence and Fern Kindwall.

He and his older sister, LaVaughn, were raised in the rural farming town of Albert City, Iowa. He graduated from Albert City High School.

Dick spent many of his formative years hunting in Iowa and working in Northern Canada at remote fishing lodges, where his obsession with the outdoors and adventure was cultivated.

He attended Buena Vista College and the University of Iowa, where he studied finance and literature.

He followed in the footsteps of his father with a career in banking, which took him to San Francisco in the early 1960s where he worked as a bank examiner for the Federal Reserve.

Several years of extensive travel while examining banks led to an opportunity to form Bank of Willamette Valley in Dallas, along with his parents, and sister and brother-in-law Lloyd Penner. This bank served the community of Polk County for 25 years.

Dick loved beautiful Western Oregon, and it was there that he met the love of his life, Judy Lund. They married on Feb. 22, 1974.

Dick was well known for his exceptional sense of humor and quick wit. He was 100 percent character; a man with varied interests, experiences and a great conversationalist.

He was an avid fisherman and hunter. Dick enjoyed sharing this passion with friends, family and made a point of passing these skills onto his daughters. He had many adventures throughout the Pacific Northwest and beyond and had a special love for the Oregon Coast where he spent so much of his time.

Dick and Judy developed a love of the Arizona desert, where they spent time over the past 15 years. They created another network of wonderful friends in Lake Havasu.

He was preceded in death by his sister, LaVaughn.

Survivors include his wife, Judy; daughters, Joni Kindwall-Moore, Cheryl Laverty, and Christina Kindwall; four grandchildren; and extend-

Benjamin 'Ben' Fulton Magill

Oct. 18, 1927 – Jan. 6, 2016
Benjamin "Ben" Fulton Magill, 88, of Independence died Jan. 6 following a long illness.

He was born in Seattle to Nilmah Miller Snyder Magill, and Fulton Young Magill.

Ben's father worked for the telephone company, so the family moved from Tacoma, Wash., where Ben attended Stadium High School, then to Palo Alto, Calif., and then to Woodside, Calif.

The community was in the country, so Ben was able to have a horse, and attended Sequoia High School in Redwood City, Calif. The family moved back to Tacoma, and Ben started college at the University of Washington, and majored in engineering.

He joined Psi Upsilon fraternity. Ben was drafted into the 106th Airborne Air Control Squadron and served as an Air Force Traffic Controller during 1946 and 1947 at several airbases in the U.S.

When the war ended, he returned home and decided that his scholastic interests were really farming, dairy science, and agricultural. He graduated with a Bachelor of Science degree in Animal Science from Washington State College in 1952.

He then attended Oregon State University to get his master's degree in dairy production science in 1954, followed by a Ph.D. degree in dairy and animal husbandry in 1960. He was a graduate assistant for the Dairy Department at Oregon State.

While at Oregon State, Ben met Nancy at the end of her senior year. Nancy had already been accepted to her dietetic internship in Rochester, N.Y.

They were married at St. Mark's Episcopal Church in Palo Alto on Sept. 12, 1959. They made their first home in Corvallis, and then moved to Monmouth to be closer to the farm.

Ben was a member of the Elks Club, belonged to the Jaycees in Corvallis and Independence, and was an Eagle Scout in his early years. Ben was an active member of the St. Hilda's Episcopal Church in Monmouth.

He held positions of senior warden and clerk of the bishop's advisory committee. He took pride in upgrading the church grounds and taking care of the building. Ben served on the board of directors for Dallas Hospital, which is now part of Salem Health.

Ben ran for the Polk County Commissioner position in 1979 and stayed in office for three terms, a total of 12 years, during which time he reportedly ended up working with the most commissioners in the history of Polk County.

Ben and Nancy supported the Western Oregon University Fine Arts program, Polk County Museum, St. Paul's Episcopal Church Music Guild, and Willamette Heritage Center (formerly Mission Mill Museum) and the Elsinore Theater's renovation project.

After Ben retired, he enjoyed going to Burgerville in Monmouth for coffee with a great group of friends.

He was always fixing something or inventing a way to be more efficient. He also created a pond in front of their house that many enjoyed for fishing and riding on a barge that he built.

Survivors include his wife of 56 years, Nancy Lee Richards Magill; daughters, Nancy Anne, Heather Lee (Larry) and Robin Elizabeth (Paul); and four grandchildren.

Viewing is Thursday from 1 to 5 p.m. at Farnstrom Mortuary in Independence. Service is Friday at 11 a.m. at St. Paul's Episcopal Church in Salem.

Contributions are suggested to St. Hilda's Episcopal Church in Monmouth or a charity of your choice.

Public testimony at Wednesday's hearing was largely in favor of the proposed amendment and no one spoke against it, with one exception. A vocal opponent of the legalization of marijuana and the effort to implement HB 3400 within the county, Ainsworth voted with his convictions Wednesday.

He cited concerns about minors having more access to marijuana, banking issues for marijuana businesses, and that federal law still prohibits use of the drug.

"I strongly oppose it," he said. "And I will always be opposed to it."

Ainsworth's view did not win the day, as commissioners Jennifer Wheeler and Craig Pope approved the amendment.

Pope did so while noting he shares many of Ainsworth's concerns.

"But for all of you working in the industry, I applaud you for being thoughtful and intent on resolving those concerns," Pope said. "Our function is to do the best job we can in applying intelligent time, place and manner provisions in county law that will protect everybody that we can."
