

Crash: ODOT to install warnings

One way ODOT planners hope to increase the awareness of cross traffic is by installing a true activated warning system this winter, he said.

“What that system is, is warning lights,” Torres said. “These yellow beacon lights will go on when traffic approaches from the east and the west that will warn motorists traveling on 99 that there’s traffic at that intersection, and they’re waiting to cross.”

Torres said when these warning systems are installed on other high-speed rural roads, it helps drivers pay more attention to entering traffic.

Most of the accidents — 25 out of the 32 — were at an angle, Torres said.

“They’re (drivers) not judging the speed very well, so they’re turning out and getting hit,” he said.

A traffic light would not help increase safety, Torres said.

“Traffic signals don’t work very well on those high-speed rural roadways,” he said. “You go from angle crashes to really bad rear-ends and T-bones. You don’t solve the problem; you just change the pattern of crashes.”

Reducing the speed limit or declaring a safety corridor also would not work to increase safety, Torres said.

“If we lower the speed limit, it’s not necessarily going to slow the drivers down,” he said. “Motorists are going to go as fast as they think they can go. You’d have to literally have law enforcement sitting out there all the time writing out tickets.”

ODOT officials are in talks with Polk County leaders about other alternatives to the intersection at Clow Corner and 99W, Torres said.

“We’re looking at separating the intersection, taking the road that’s coming from the east to west and moving that further to the south,” he said. “We haven’t determined what that would be. We want to reduce the conflict points.”

However, that solution will prove costly, Torres said. “Engineering the solution is much more expensive,” he said. “Our goal is to limit the fatalities and the nature of those crashes so they’re not so bad. We’ve had some bad crashes out there, no question about it.”

HART: Fall Family Fair gives community look inside stables

HART was founded by Sue Rosen, who has been working with equine therapy for longer than 28 years.

It started with her own sister, Newell said.

“One of her sisters had a disability and couldn’t walk, and was always watching when (Sue) would ride horses, and longing to do it,” Newell said. “Finally one day Sue decided she was going to figure out a way to get her sister on a horse. She went and got a kitchen chair and strapped it to the back of the horse and got (her sister) up on that horse.”

That was the earliest of the adaptive saddles, Newell said, noting that they’ve come a long way since then.

In fact, based on a client’s needs, an adaptive saddle will be built for him or her, Newell said.

“Even if they’re not awake, we have clients who are asleep when they arrive,” she said. But the horse adaptive riding therapy still helps them. “Their bodies and their muscles are still being trained by the movement. Their bodies are taking that in, and their muscles are retaining that movement pattern.”

To celebrate their clients, their families and the community, HART will host a Fall Family Fair from 1 to 4 p.m. on Sunday.

Tickets cost $15 for adults; $7.50 for children younger than 12; $40 for a family of four (two adults and two children). Children 2 and younger are free.

Money supports HART in its mission, including scholarships for those who cannot afford the therapy.

“We have need-based scholarships available with a copay from $5 to $20,” Gulick said. “Our actual cost is $50 to $115 per session.”

Proceeds this year also benefit one of their horses, Pete, who was injured in a car accident in July.

“There will be money directed toward his continued care and recovery,” Gulick said.

The event will feature a barbecue lunch by the Independence Elks Lodge, face-painting, pictures with the 2015 Breyer Horse Model, Smokin’ Doubledutch, as well as entertainment the equestrian way — drill teams, reining presentations and dressage.

“Once you pay for your meal ticket, everything is included,” Gulick said.

The event is all about the community, she added.

“We target this for a family, and we target it for community,” she said. “We want to link the community to HART.”

Volunteer panel could be answer to codes

By Jolene Guzman

The Itemizer-Observer

FALLS CITY — The city of Falls City is looking into forming a volunteer panel to judge code enforcement cases.

Falls City hasn’t had a true code enforcement system since 2014, when the former officer left the city to take another position. The city’s municipal court has been inactive since then.

“I’ve talked to our attorney. I’ve talked to the sheriff,” said Mayor Terry Ungricht. “In order to be able to do it, we all agree it would be best to have an official court.”

Using a volunteer judge or panel of judges has worked in the city of Detroit and, Ungricht said, with amendments to the city’s code, Falls City could start a similar program.

“Under this method we would hire a contract code enforcer to investigate the violations, negotiate with the property owner to abate the problem, issue citations for the properties who do not comply, and build a case to present to the panel for a ruling,” Ungricht wrote in staff memo to the Falls City City Council.

The city’s attorney said the necessary code changes would cost about $1,500.

“I’m trying to figure out a way that we can enforce our ordinances and afford it,” Ungricht said.

The council unanimously voted in favor of giving the setup a try.

“This has been an ongoing issue with our community,” said Councilor Jenn Drill. “We really need to do something.”

Members of the council said they would prefer having a three-member volunteer panel hear cases instead of just one volunteer.
