Golf club closer to joining UGB

DALLAS — The Dallas City Golf Club is two steps closer to being part of the city of Dallas' urban growth boundary.

Monday, the Dallas City Council had its first review of an ordinance to include the property in the UGB, a move that will allow the club to renovate buildings and expand services offered at the nine-hole executive

On April 26, the Polk

County Board of Commissioners approved the club owner's application to move from the county to the Dallas UGB

A second reading of the ordinance and vote is slated to take place at the council's May 15 meeting.

The council addressed the popularity of another form of golf Monday, making it necessary for groups holding tournaments to reserve the disc golf course in Dallas

City officials said requests have increased. Tournaments require more staff time and keep recreational users from playing during the tournament.

Reserving the course would cost $100 for four hours, plus $15 per hour for additional time. Councilor Jackie Lawson suggested the city require tournament reservations for another sport growing in popularity: Pickleball.

Pickleball combines elements of tennis, badminton and table tennis.

The city budgeted $30,000 from parks system development charges to build pickleball courts in Roger Jordan Community Park near the Dallas Aquatic Center. HEAL Cities also awarded a $9,500 grant to help pay for the

"Apparently, it's way beyond the scope of what I ever knew, and I keep hearing more about it," Lawson said. "It might behoove us to even consider going ahead and moving on that now."

said the disc golf ordinance doesn't include pickleball, but the city could consider that if requests came in for tournaments.

In other business, the city: • Selected a new auditor, Pauly Rogers & Co., following and request for proposal process. Pauly Rogers was the low bidder.

• Will have a workshop in June discussing the role of the recreation coordinator position that the Dallas Budget Committee decided to restore to the budget.

WHAT IS THE BIGGEST SINGLE ISSUE FACING THE DALLAS SCHOOL DIS-TRICT? HOW WOULD YOU ADDRESS IT IF ELECTED?

Issues like transgender locker room access and the budget. On the transgender locker room issue, people were so excited on both sides of the issue and everyone was trying to write the perfect policy. My kids are not a policy. We should be dealing with what is best for the individual. Policy has become like the tax code.

URD budget includes money to buy armory

By Jolene Guzman

The Itemizer-Observer

DALLAS — The Dallas Urban Renewal District proposed 2017-18 budget includes money to purchase the old armory property, help pay for Dallas Downtown's RARE program participant, and continue street and building façade improvement projects. Jason Locke, the city's community development director who also works with the district, introduced the district's $548,000 total budget Thursday. The district's budget committee consists of the same people as the city of Dallas' committee.

Locke said much of what is included is based on recommendations from the district's advisory council.

He said $100,000 is set aside for purchasing the old Dallas armory property, though not all that may be spent this year.

"That reflects a total purchase price, not a payment price, of the armory property," Locke said.

Committee member Pete Christensen asked if that property wouldn't be a better site for the new senior center than the current property adjacent to the old Carnegie library.

"The issue is that we've already basically committed to that site. We've committed to that site near the Carnegie Building," Locke said. "That's where all the environmental reviews have happened. That's where the land use approvals happened.'

Furthermore, City Manager Ron Foggin pointed out the grant paying for the new center only applies to the current site.

Locke said the plan for the armory property includes a private developer.

'The purpose of the district is not to build public buildings on publicly owned land," he said. "The purpose of acquiring that property is to basically ensure that it develops with a high-quality private development so that property comes back on the tax roll.'
