Mike

"He's quirky sometimes, and he's kind of like the kids where he kind of goes from one thing to another a lot," she said. "As long as they can keep up with him, they love him. They enjoy being in his class. They enjoy Fix it (class) and just being creative and doing outside-of-the-box projects."

She said he's only missed a few terms of FACES in its 10 years. The hope is to expand his role in the schools.

"We've looked into getting him CTE (career and technical education) certified to teach classes during the day," she said. "Years ago, it was a lot more challenging to get non-teachers certified, but the requirements have lessened, and CTE is a big push right now, so I'm hoping someday his dream will come true."

Mack said McConnell doesn't reserve his giving for the city and schools.

"He's there to assist you mechanically, just any way you need," Mack said. "For me personally, the whole rim fell off my car. He gathered everything up, got here and fixed it within a short amount of time. Mike is there when you need him."

McConnell said his motivation is his community - and he hopes his example will inspire others to give their time.

"It's my town," he said. "When you look back, you can say, 'Well I think it made a little difference.'"

Houghtaling said that already is the case.

His dedication is admirable. He really loves Falls City," she said. "He loves our kids and always looks for ways to make things better."
