The way to build up Dallas is to patronize Dallas people.

CHANGE OF MANAGEMENT.

After nearly seventeen years of continuous service as editor and publisher of the Polk County Observer, the writer must now say good-bye to the many readers and patrons of the paper. It is hardly necessary to say that he retires from the work with a feeling of regret tinged with sadness at the thought of parting with friends who are near and dear and retiring from a business to the development of which he has given his best energy and talents since the day that he passed his 21st milestone. The only reason for his retirement at this time, as is known to many of his friends, is that he is losing his sense of hearing. A troublesome throat affliction of many years standing has brought about partial deafness, and skilled surgeons have advised that the only escape from a total loss of hearing will be found in a change of climate. Acting upon this advice, business will be given up for a time and relief will be sought in a distant clime.

The writer purchased an interest in the Observer in the month of February, 1892. At that time the paper was not on a paying basis, and it required many months and years of hard work to build up a business that would be profitable to its owners. In March, 1899, the entire plant was transferred to its present ownership. New and modern machinery was installed, new business methods were adopted, and soon the paper became a source of profit. For the last six years, the business has steadily increased, and the Observer now has the best equipped newspaper and job printing plant in Oregon in a town the size of Dallas. It will therefore be understood why the owner is reluctant to leave it just at a time when he was beginning to enjoy the fruit of his labor.

As in the life of the Observer, Dallas has also seen many changes in seventeen years. When we engaged in the newspaper business here in 1892, Dallas was a town of barely 800 inhabitants—little more than a crossroads trading point. The train service was poor, the mail facilities limited, and the town could not boast of waterworks, telephones, sewerage, and the dozen and one other conveniences that go to make a thriving, homelike city. There were practically no manufacturing institutions with their monthly payrolls, and the merchants were obliged to look solely to the agricultural community for patronage and support. With the passage of the years, however, came growth and development, and Dallas came to be known as one of the thriving towns of Western Oregon. Factories were built to give employment to laboring men; the old and vexing county seat question was settled by the building of a beautiful stone courthouse to replace the wooden structure destroyed by fire; the public school building was enlarged, and a college for the higher education of the boys and girls of the county was founded; and, finally, as a crowning effort, the interest of capital was enlisted in building the railroad to the forests west of Falls City, an enterprise that will insure Dallas' supremacy as a lumber manufacturing and shipping point for all time to come. From a village of 800 people, Dallas has become a thriving inland city of 2500 population. This growth and development did not come by chance; it was brought about by the enterprising and unselfish spirit of its business men and citizens, who worked together shoulder to shoulder and gave liberally of their private means to promote the public good. No one knows better than the writer of the personal sacrifices made by some of these merchants to help build up the town, and it is a source of satisfaction to know that they are now enjoying their reward in a steadily increasing business in a city that takes first rank among the prosperous manufacturing centers of Oregon.

Whether our lot shall again be cast among the people of Dallas, time alone will decide. But certain it is that we shall ever cherish fond memories of the friendships we have formed, both in a social and business way, with the good people of the town and county, and of the pleasant association with the bunch of good fellows who supply the people of Oregon with their local newspapers. May all live long and prosper. Editing a newspaper is not always pleasant work, but we desire to say in parting that we have never knowingly written one word that would cause a heart-ache. We have tried to perform our editorial duty fearlessly and earn our money by giving our readers the news—not news, however, that would sell papers at the price of wounded feelings or blasted reputations, but news that would build up, and not tear down—news that would help mankind to live.

The Observer business and plant is left in good hands. We have leased it to John Allgood, the capable foreman of the office, and Dean Collins, who has been employed on the local staff for the last year. No change will be made in the office force, and the familiar faces will continue to greet all customers. These young men and young women have been in the employ of the Observer long enough to become thoroughly familiar with the office, and have proven themselves industrious and faithful in their work. We leave the valuable plant in their hands, feeling confident that they will take good care of it and prove worthy of their trust in every way. As a final word, we are going to ask the many friends who have so faithfully stood by the Observer all of these years to assist these young people whenever opportunity offers, thereby aiding them in establishing themselves in business and in carrying out the cherished plans of one who has devoted the best years of his life to the upbuilding of an industry that would be creditable alike to its owner and to the town in which it was established.

IRRIGATION DISCONTINUED

Undiscovered Waste of City Water Temporarily Reduces Supply in Reservoir.

W. L. Soehren, superintendent of the city waterworks, announces that he will be obliged to order all irrigation discontinued temporarily, owing to a waste of water, which has not been located as yet, and which is keeping the reserve in the city reservoir far below the proper level.

A careful examination Wednesday showed that the reservoir was receiving a full stream from the intake, which should have maintained the water within a few feet of the top. Nevertheless there was scarcely more than five feet of water in the reservoir. An examination of the sewer outlet shows that this enormous waste is not due to leaking toilets or sink fixtures.

The discontinuance of the irrigation is rapidly bringing the reserve in the reservoir back to its normal level, and Mr. Soehren hopes to be able to locate and stop the waste within a few days. He says that he believes he will be able to permit the renewal of irrigation next week. The present course of action was necessary to maintain a proper reserve of water for use in case of fire.

The makers of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, for the cure of weak, nervous, run-down, over-worked, debilitated, pain-racked women, knowing this medicine to be made up of ingredients, every one of which has the strongest possible indorsement of the leading and standard authorities of the several schools of practice, are perfectly willing, and in fact, are only too glad to print, as they do, the formula, or list of ingredients, of which it is composed, in plain English, on every bottle-wrapper.

The formula of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription will bear the most critical examination of medical experts, for it contains no alcohol, narcotics, harmful, or habit-forming drugs, and no agent enters into it that is not highly recommended by the most advanced and leading medical teachers and authorities of their several schools of practice. UNITED STATES COURT OF CLAIMS

The Publishers of Webster's International Dictionary allege that it "is, in fact, the popular Unabridged thoroughly re-edited in every detail, and vastly enriched in every part, with the purpose of adapting it to meet the larger and severer requirements of another generation."

We are of the opinion that this allegation most clearly and accurately describes the work that has been accomplished and the result that has been reached. The Dictionary, as it now stands, has been thoroughly re-edited in every detail, has been corrected in every part, and is admirably adapted to meet the larger and severer requirements of a generation which demands more of popular philological knowledge than any generation that the world has ever contained.

It is perhaps needless to add that we refer to the dictionary in our judicial work as of the highest authority in accuracy of definition; and that in the future as in the past it will be the source of constant reference.
