POLK COUNTY'S FAIR.

Polk county is proud of her Industrial Fair and indeed she has reason to be, for although others have been perhaps larger or more elaborate, the quality of the exhibits entered in this Fair, rank far higher than that of the exhibits entered in any of the other county fairs that have been held in Oregon this year.
The nature of the entries this year shows that the schoolchildren of Polk county have learned much by the experience in the two previous Industrial Fairs and that they have been using to a good advantage the knowledge thus acquired. They will learn still more at the present one and the fruits of that newly acquired knowledge will be found in the exhibits of the Industrial Fair to be held next Fall.
Herein lies the greatness and the main value of this comparatively new institution. It is a stimulus to broad and steady growth, the growth that will lift the child, unconsciously almost, into a sphere of highest effort and usefulness as a citizen in our commonwealth, for while he may be striving with all his might to produce the best exhibit, he is also building up within himself those qualities of character that will enable him to plan and execute to the best advantage the work which may fall to his lot to do when he shall have reached a man's estate.
The Fair which is now being held and the Fair which was held a year ago, give ample proof that this growth is taking place and that should be a greater source of pride to the parents and teachers of Polk county than the mere fact that the present exhibit is, to speak colloquially, "the best ever," for it shows that the Industrial Fair is achieving the results for which it was first instituted three years ago.

HISTORIC SANTA FE

Former Observer Editor Enjoys Visit to Ancient City of Holy Faith.

From the Evening New Mexican, the oldest newspaper in New Mexico and the leading daily of ancient Santa Fe, we clip the following:
"J. C. Hayter, editor and publisher of the Dallas (Oregon) Observer, was a visitor in Santa Fe yesterday. He is enjoying a well-earned vacation, after seventeen years of work at the editorial desk and will spend the winter in New Mexico and California. Mr. Hayter visited all of the principal places of interest in the city yesterday, and when seen at the Claire hotel last evening was enthusiastic in his praise of Santa Fe, the beautiful. Asked to give his impressions of the city to the New Mexican, he said:
"My wish of a lifetime has been gratified today. I have seen historic Santa Fe. Now, you will know by that assertion that I am letting my enthusiasm run away with my desire for exact speech, for the truth is I have scarcely begun to see it yet. No traveler can see Santa Fe in a day. By diligent application to the business in hand, he might get a fair idea of its beauties and attractions in a week, and, after having devoted a month to the enjoyment of the sights and attractions of the city and surrounding country, he might then be able to say with some considerable degree of truthfulness that he had seen Santa Fe. No lesser period of time would suffice. Therefore, any impressions I may give to your readers must be considered as those of one who is scarcely qualified to form a just estimate of the beauties and attractions of the Ancient City of the Holy Faith.
"I find here a wondrous blending of the old and the new—a harmonious blending that is a source of constant surprise and delight to the traveler visiting your city for the first time. Charming intermingled, one finds the historic palace of the Spanish grandee and the modern home of the successful man of the twentieth century; the mud-walled hut of the pioneer days and the most advanced ideas of the present-day architect; the dusty door-yards and lanes of the Indian pueblo and the well-kept lawns and the cool, clean streets of the most cultured civilization that the world has yet known. In no other city in the United States are past and present so strikingly presented to the eye of the tourist as in Santa Fe.
"Your citizens do well when they exercise such care in preserving these ancient landmarks. It not only proves that they are endeavoring to make the city attractive to the tourist, the home-seeker and the investor, but it most impressively demonstrates that in the rush for wealth in the present age of commercialism, the preservation of the history and traditions of this interesting portion of our great country has not been lost sight of. It proves that while pursuing the busy, strenuous life, the men and women of Santa Fe have not neglected to preserve, as nearly as possible, these historic relics to serve as an object lesson in progress to the people of the present day and to the generations yet unborn. It is a most worthy admixture of business and sentiment, such as is nowhere else to be found.
"I was especially impressed by the beauty and substantial construction of your public buildings. Any and all of them will compare favorably with those of any state having twice the wealth and population of New Mexico. Did I say state? Well, that's what it should be, emphatically declared the speaker. It is almost impossible to think of this marvellously rich and prosperous portion of our union as a territory. New Mexico is entitled to stand forth by all that is right and just, and the day is not far distant when Congress will be forced by the very nature of events, to recognize the claims of your people. And then, every one will be wondering why the great territory was so long kept standing outside the door patiently knocking for admission. Four people are presenting precisely the right course in building up and developing the territory until it shall reach a degree of importance when those men can no longer afford to deny in the recognition, it so richly deserves.
"Last, but by no means least, said Mr. Hayter, I am impressed by the hospitality and kindness of your people. Every where there is evidence of a disposition to be kind and courteous to the visitor to the city, and I desire to say that kindness in the passing stranger is one of the best assets any city can have. I like the people of Santa Fe, and hope some day to show them better."
Mr. Hayter left this morning for Albuquerque, where he will represent Oregon as a delegate to the Nineteenth National Irrigation Congress. He expects to return to Santa Fe later in the year for an extended stay.
The Observer is pleased to announce that a descriptive letter entitled "Historic Santa Fe" will appear soon in the columns of this paper. We are sure that this contribution from Mr. Hayter's pen will be awaited with interest by the readers who have followed his description of his journey through the great South-west.
