HELD SPECIAL SESSION

City Council Discusses Meter System and Makes Arrangements For Sewer Assessment.

A special meeting of the city council was held last night for the purpose of considering the report of the committee appointed last week to confer with Hon. H. V. Gates concerning the plan of attaching meters to the irrigation hydrants in Dallas.

The general trend of the report submitted was unfavorable to the plan of adopting a meter system. No action was taken on it and immediately after it had been submitted City Engineer Morrison filed figures to show that the irrigation rates in Portland are much lower than in Dallas and that the city is making a good profit from the municipal ownership of its water system. The subject will be given further consideration at the next regular meeting and council will probably take action on the report filed by the committee last night.

The city attorney was instructed to draft an ordinance to license street peddlers of groceries and general household commodities, since a number of persons have been plying this trade in Dallas for some time and it was thought proper for the city to extend to the established merchants of the city some protection against such transient opposition.

It was decided to place $1800 of the general fund in the street fund to cover deficits and uncollected assessments on the street improvement work and the auditor was instructed to notify all property owners who had not yet paid their assessments that these must be paid as soon as possible or legal proceedings would be resorted to to secure settlement.

No assessment has been made on the sewer project and Mayor Muir appointed committees last night to examine the property in the sewer districts and fix a valuation on it as a basis for assessment. The personnel of the committees is as follows: Oak street district—Councilmen Ellis and Coad; Clay street district—Councilmen Staffin and Myer; Washington street district—Councilmen Shaw and Uglov.

RETURNED FROM THE EAST

W. V. Fuller Describes Industrial Conditions As He Found Them in Atlantic States.

W. V. Fuller arrived home Saturday evening from a six weeks' business and pleasure trip in the East. His journey eastward was made over the Canadian Pacific, down through Illinois, New York, and Pennsylvania terminating in Washington, D. C., where he spent a week's time before starting on his return trip to Oregon through the central states by way of the Union Pacific.

While in Washington, Mr. Fuller had the pleasure of meeting President Roosevelt, paid a visit to beautiful Mount Vernon, and delved to his heart's content among the government records in the great capital city.

Concerning business conditions in the East, he says that while the effects of the 1907 panic were more severe in the Atlantic states than in the western coast states, business in every department is picking up rapidly since the close of the presidential campaign and everything indicates a speedy return to normal conditions of prosperity.

Mr. Fuller was in New York during the latter part of the campaign and for a short time succeeding the election, and characterizes it as "the hottest fight he ever saw." But, he added, "the opportunities of the working men to secure employment were immeasurably increased when the final result of the election became known."

He said that in passing the offices of employment agencies a few days before election, one would see their black boards almost empty, the few demands for labor being filled almost the instant they were sent in. In contrast to this, within four days after the election one would see the blackboards in front of the same agencies chalked as full as they could hold and instead of men asking in vain for employment the situation was reversed and those having work to be done were clamoring in vain for men to do it.

In Minnesota and the Middle states the improvement is not so rapid or so marked. Minnesota especially, a lumber state, has accumulated an enormous reserve of lumber and just at this time is minimizing its output of logs, which condition has and will have for a short time a depressing effect on the industrial activity of that region.

Mr. Fuller's main object in making the trip was to interest eastern capital in the timber land of the west, and he says that he found conditions in the east, and especially in Pennsylvania, most encouraging. In Pennsylvania he met a number of men who have already secured large timber holdings in Oregon and Washington and everything indicates that the time is at hand when there will be a general movement of eastern capital toward Oregon and Washington timber.

Pennsylvania has already exhausted its timber supply and everything indicates that the supply from the southern states, on which they have been relying thus far, will soon be also exhausted. Already they are waking up to the conditions and this awakening is bound to result in a general movement toward the next natural base of timber supplies—the forests of Oregon and Washington.

DAY BEFORE THANKSGIVING

WIDE TALKS BY U. S. LOUGHARY'S OFFICE BOY

I was thinking how many things a fellow has to be thankful for around the city of Dallas. First, he can be thankful he lives in a country where it is possible for every man to get ahead of the hounds and own his own home. Then he can be thankful that he lives in the best State in the great country, the best county in the state and in the best city in the county and among the best people in the world who buy of Loughary's best groceries on the market and works in the best store in the city for a boss who gives everybody (including the Office Boy) the square deal—not from compulsion or from business policy but from an honest desire to live and move our goods according to the Golden Rule. So it's up to you to show the boss (and me) that you appreciate our business methods and wish to encourage them. See our new line of fancy jugs and vases. See our stock as you begin to think about Christmas and don't delay about selecting your presents. We can show you a good line now.
