STORING THE ICE CROP.

Cutting the Cakes and Putting Them Away.

The ice season is not over. In many sections of the country the crop is now at its best. The usefulness of ice on the farm cannot be exaggerated. One who has made a business for fifteen years of storing ice says that five years ago he remedied his old icehouse. A description of the remodeled structure follows:

It is 12 by 14 feet and 12 feet high on a two foot stone foundation. The studding is one 2 foot 8 inches sheathing on both sides and filled between by a string a piece of tanned cheese over the center of the jar. If there are any mice in the closet the bait will attract them, but just as soon as the first mouse reaches the center of the paper he will drop into the jar and ready for the next one. A trap arranged in the same manner can be used for the capture of field and harvesting mice, which make odd and amusing pests.

A barrel covered with stiff brown paper can be used for common rats, but they will gnaw out unless the barrel be partly filled with water.

LOST FERTILITY OF SOIL.
 Some of the Errors of Many Western Farmers.

As a general thing farmers seldom are concerned about the fertility of their soils so long as they raise good crops. But just as soon as the crops show decided signs of falling they begin to "wonder" in relation to the soil fertility. This is about as a farmer with looking the stubble after the harvest has been taken.

It would be far more profitable to consider the soil in those sections where it is so fertile than to endeavor to restore it after it has been lost.

For years it has been the habit of parts of the west that the fertility of the soil in those sections was so great that no manure was needed. But it seems that today there is trouble brewing. An expert says:

"In many sections of the corn belt the day has come when farmers need to pay more attention to maintaining the fertility of the soil. This has been shown by the fact that the soil has become so infertile that they did not profit by the experience of eastern and southern farmers, namely, that continuous grain culture and continuous neglect of restoring farmyard manure and applying it regularly and in the most economical manner to their soils is evident from the present lack of fertility in many of the corn belt states, where the soils at one time were so productive as to lead people to think that their exhaustion was practically an impossibility."

It is pertinent also to refer to the trials conducted by the Cornell agricultural station to demonstrate the losses to stable manure when exposed to leaching and weathering. A pile of manure that contained elements worth $5.48 after being exposed for five months was worth only $2.03. Leaving manure in piles in the field is an antiquated method that should never be practiced for the reason that it results in fertilizing the spots where the heaps lie too heavily, giving them fully three times as much of the fertilizing elements as they need, while three times as much ground receives less than it needs or not enough to make a showing. Where manure is allowed to lie in heaps on a field for a few weeks or a month it is an impossibility to spread it so as to get an even distribution of organic matter and of the elements of fertility. It is preferable to spread the manure directly from the wagon with a fork, although this is far less messy and to date 35%

as it does not leave air spaces and also prevents the cakes from freezing together so solidly. When filling loose boards are placed in front of the doors, and about ten or twelve inches back of them is filled in with sawdust. The leechhouse is filled from a pond about a mile away. Ice saws are used and the cakes cut from twenty-five to (thirty-five inches square. A common wagon box will hold two tiers, thirty cakes of eight inch ice. The capacity of this leechhouse is forty tons, but of course any size could be built on the same plan, and a larger one would keep the ice in a much better condition.

A Homemade Mouse Trap.

If you have got no cat and find the mice in your house getting altogether too bold for comfort, or if you would like to keep some mice for pets, we can tell you how to make a trap in which to catch them.

Over the top of an earthenware jar fasten a piece of writing paper, tightly binding it with a string or elastic band. In the center of the paper cut a cross, as shown in the illustration. Set the jar in the closet and suspend

AS GOOD AS A CAT.

There's no stopping in the kitchen. Wandering about roosters write. The house is not all snug and And turn up from morn till night.

No roosters now crow in the parlor. No hens lay in the beds. The chickens and the pullets are all tucked under my head.

I no longer hear my Henry. Cuckooing of his cups and grices. Crowing in his midday dreams. That he would spring some "big sur price."

He told us fifty times a day. How long you would not show up after in showing now he had "em necked."

My, he's meeklike since he got home. For his hives all went to wreck. That he had sent out his roosters. Soar pious in the neck.

For so glad the judges came. When the showman swears and fuss. It's the first time since old Adam. That the men missed blaming us.

Yes dear Henry is so meeklike. Showing in the rooster pen. It will not suit our necks again. Then, such and well, neck again.
