Water Works For The Farm For Comfort

No longer is it necessary for the resident of the country or suburban district to be without the comforts and conveniences of city life. The matter of comfort is becoming more and more of prime importance, and with the increasing use of the telephone, rural mail delivery, artificial illuminating gas, modern heating plants, and the automobile, the rural householder is rivaling his city cousin for the conveniences of the city without its many discomforts. No wonder the city man is turning his face to rural life.

The Water Question There is still one thing of vital importance that has had less than its share of attention. This is the need for a system of water under pressure similar to a city water works system—some means of storing water and forcing it where it is needed, when it is needed, and with sufficient force to be useful for all purposes. Until within the last few years, a system that was well built and practical in every way, was not to be had. The development of the pneumatic system of water supply is so recent, that a brief summary of its uses and advantages may be of interest.

For the Stock Farm and Dairy Nowhere else can a water pressure system be more profitably used than on the stock farm. Whether operated by windmill, gasoline engine, hydraulic ram or hand power, it will pay for itself over and over again in the saving of labor, especially during the busy season. No one knows better than the stockman and dairyman how important it is to have cool running water in summer and tempered water in winter. The stalls in the barn can be equipped with individual watering troughs, and each pasture may have its tank, besides modern plumbing fixtures in the residence.

For the Truck and Poultry Farm A constant supply of fresh running water is one of the most important essentials to the success of the poultry raiser. Especially is this true in winter when the progressive poultryman keeps his stock in weather-proof houses, and feeds them warm feed. A supply of tempered running water will keep them in the best of condition and with the home also supplied, comfort and economy are combined in one. The truck farmer may irrigate his crops irrespective of the rainfall, and always have produce to sell at the top price.

For Fire Protection How helpless is the resident of the country district in case of fire! Without the aid of a fire department, destruction of property is almost certain, especially in the open country where the wind gets in its work. There is no better way to prevent this destruction than by the installation of a Leader Water Pressure System. The insurance companies make a lower rate on property thus protected, and the reduction will often pay for the whole plant in a few years, besides the comfort and convenience of its continued use.

Water Purified by Aeration The confinement of water under pressure, especially where the tank is located in a cool place, is highly beneficial to the water. The oxygen in the air destroys the impurities in the water, and by our plan of pumping into the tank a small amount of air with the water, the water is aerated—bubbles of air pass through it and purify it. The water when drawn from the tank is sparkling and much clearer than when pumped in. Water containing minerals in solution, and cistern and well water that is otherwise thought unhealthy, is in this way often improved and rendered palatable.

Elevated Tank not Necessary The old way of pumping water into a storage tank has manifest disadvantages. The elevated tank, erected on stilts or on the windmill frame, is at the best unsightly, besides costing much to install and keep painted and in repair. It will often freeze and perhaps burst in winter, may blow down and cause damage to property and stock at any time of the year, and the pressure developed is never satisfactory. The water is too cold for the stock in winter and becomes hot and stagnant in summer. While the first cost may appear somewhat less, the cost of maintenance will soon demonstrate that the Leader System is the one to own.
