GAS SHOOTS FROM OIL WELL

EXCITING TIME FOLLOWS AT TEMPT TO PULL CASING.

Immense Volume of Gas Pours From Pipe and Burns With Fierce Flame; Workmen Await Tools.

Awaiting the arrival of special equipment from Portland, in order to remove a broken casing from the bottom of the hole, the drillers at the Whiteaker oil well prospect southeast of the city are resting on their oars this week. Late Saturday afternoon while engaged in pulling out the casing in order to clear the hole from the accumulated sand that had been forced upward by some tremendous pressure from below, the casing broke leaving a gap of several feet near the bottom of the well. Instantly an immense volume of gas shot upward from the mouth of the pipe causing the "tenderfoot" occupants of the derrick house who were watching operations, to rush for safety. The gas poured from the mouth of the casing with a roar that could be heard blocks away and presented the appearance of a cloud of steam. It was ignited and burned fiercely with a flame fully five feet in height and considerable difficulty was experienced in extinguishing it. Even after the greater flow of gas had stopped, a pronounced roaring and rumbling could be detected at the bottom of the hole. Subsequently the bottom of the well filled with water shutting off the heavy flow of gas, although the odor is still plainly apparent around the derrick.

What is known as a "casing spear" has been ordered from Portland and when it arrives an effort will be made to remove the broken casing. The bottom of the well will then be cleaned and drilling operations resumed. It is confidently expected that there will be "something doing" at this well by the end of the week.
