BUILDING THE TURKEY.

We are not exhibiting the skeleton in the closet that gossips claim rattles its bones in every house but their own, but below we show the big bony frame of a turkey to remind turkey raisers they are not just feeders, but builders.

You never saw a hog raiser start little pigs on corn. They get milk, the bone, muscle, blood, the body builder.

Name with the calf, human and otherwise. So the successful turkey raiser cuts out fattener until time to finish for Thanksgiving and feeds to build bone, muscle, blood, organs—in short, a perfect physical turkey. He does this mostly with protein, and in doing so he is getting close to nature, for this is

A TURKEY SKELETON.

Mostly what the wild turkey lives and grows on in the woods and the mountains.

The wild turkey almost lives on bugs, worms, grasshoppers, snails, and Mother Turkey is just following her natural bent when she trills her pretty poult away from that cornmeal fattener out into the fields and the hills, where she shows them where to find that animal and vegetable food the Creator provides for their perfect growth.

Let the turkey raiser get back to nature; let him give Mother Turkey the eggs to hatch and poult to brood; let him remember turkeys are almost wild and that he's a builder and must feed much protein and not excess carbohydrates. Poults need not be fed much nor long until they may be left to Mother Turkey's expert care.

TURKEY POULTS FEEDING.

Thirty hours after hatch start them on dry sweet breadcrumbs, a sprinkle of grit, and have water handy.

Let next meal be equal parts cottage cheese, breadcrumbs and tender dandelion chopped fine.

Let the next be equal parts hard boiled egg (an egg to every eight poults), cottage cheese and tender onion tops chopped up together. Lead them on to plumped oatmeal, cracked red wheat, then whole wheat, and at last let them loose on nature with Mother Turkey.

Mother Turkey's motto is, "Feed little, but often, and feed mostly protein."

Yes; that's the ticket for building bon ton perfect turks.

DON'TS.

Don't expect that stable not to be bughouse if the hens roost in it, and don't kick the horse for kicking you when he gets bugs on him.

Don't blame the hogs for eating young turkeys when you do not have a wire fence to keep them out, and don't be surprised if your turks are not when they run in rot.
