SWEETHEARTS.

Miss Mary was a village maid,
Both pretty and petite;
And Mary numbered lovers three
Because she was so sweet.

Now Tom was just a village lad;
Dick was the banker's son;
And Harry a wealthy farmer boy,
Jolly and full of fun.

So on a Sunday morn
Young Richard in his pride
Came driving up in his auto car,
And took her for a ride.

And then on Wednesday Harry came,
With a buggy bright and new,
And behind a pair of prancing steeds,
Took Mary a riding, too.

But Tom, on every Friday eve,
Appeared at Mary's door,
With a box of chocolates under his arm,
He bought at Fuller's store.

Throughout the town was interest keen,
And speculation rife,
Concerning which of Mary's beaux
Should win her for his wife.

Dick's auto travelled fast and far;
And Harry's steeds pranced high;
But Tom still dealt at Fuller's store
Each time that he passed by.

The stomach is the surest road
To hearts of men, they tell;
Mayhap it is the pathway to
A maiden's heart, as well.

For Mary favored Tommy's suit,
Declaring o'er and o'er,
He owed his lot to sweets he bought
When passing Fuller's store.
