A VISION IN THE NIGHT.

The Man That Was Posed on the Edge of the Precipice.

Through the hilly country of the Basques Harry A. Franck made his way on foot with few adventures, but with many interesting experiences. At the close of one day, he tells us in "Four Months Afoot In Spain," he began to clamber upward into the mountains that rose high in the darkening sky ahead. The night grew black, for the heavens were overcast, but he who marches on into the darkness, if he is not confused by any artificial lights, may still see moderately well.

It was two hours perhaps after nightfall, and the road, its edge a sheer precipice above unfathomable depths, was winding ever higher round the shoulder of a mammoth peak when suddenly I saw a man, a denser blackness against the sea of obscurity. standing stock still on the utmost edge of the highway.

"Buenas tardes!" I greeted him in a low voice, almost afraid that a hearty tone would send him toppling backward to his death.

He neither answered nor moved. stepped closer. "You have rather a dangerous post-tion, verdad, senor?" Still he stared motionless at me through the darkness. I moved quietly forward and, thrusting out a hand, touched him on the sleeve. It was hard, as if frozen. For an instant I re colled, then with a sudden instinctive movement passed a hand quickly and lightly over his face. Was I dreaming? That, too, was hard and cold. I sprang back and, rummaging hastily through my pockets, found one broken match. The wind was rushing up from the bottomless gulf below. I struck a light, holding it in the hollow of my hand, and in the instant before it was blown out I caught a few words of an inscription on a pedestal:

Erected to the Mem-Thrown over this precipice-Bandits- Night of-But before I had made out date or name I was in darkness again,

BRAGGED A BIT HIMSELF.

It Was About a Wonderful New Machine He Had Seen.

"While I was running a bolt cutter at the Rock Island shops in Chicago," writes a contributor to Railway and Locomotive Engineering, "I boarded at a house much frequented by locomotive engineers and firemen. These men talked a great deal about their tremendous feats in getting over certain hills without the help of a second locomotive.

"My opposite neighbor at table, a young fellow who ran a lathe in the shop, grew tired of this monotonous bragging; he thought he was entitled to do a little talking himself. One evening he called out to me:

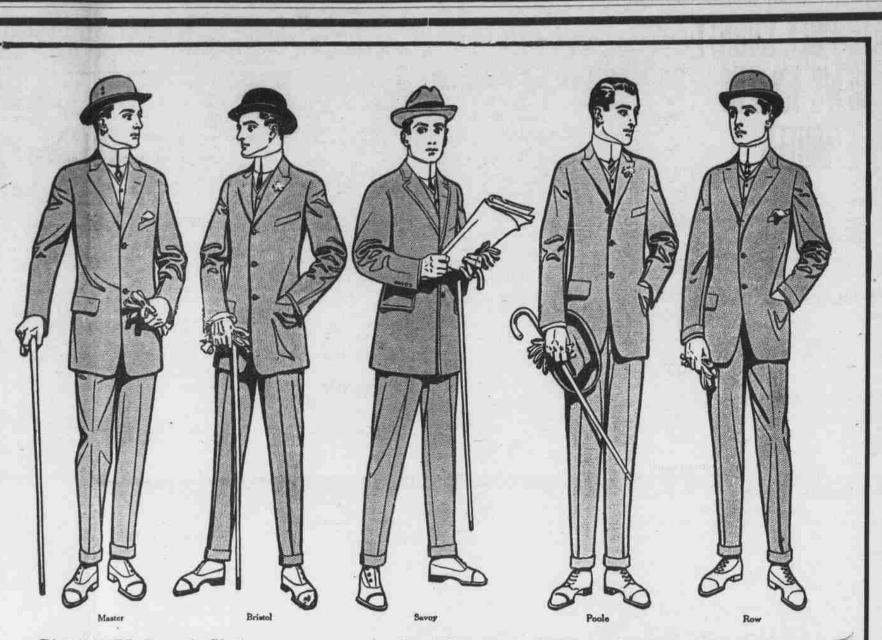

"'Well, I went over and saw that new machine today, and it's astonish ing the fine work it does.'

"How does it work? I inquired. "'Well,' said James, 'by means of a pedal attachment a fulcrumed lever converts the vertical reciprocating motion into a circular movement, The principal part of the machine is a huge disk that revolves in a vertical plane. Power is applied through the axis of the disk, and when the speed of the driving arbor is moderate the periphery of the apparatus is traveling at a high velocity. Work is done on this periphery. Pieces of the hardest steel are by mere impact reduced to any shape the skilful operator desires." "'What in the name of sense is that machine, anyway?' demanded 'Tom Briggs. "'Oh, it's a new grindstone,' replied James, and a silence that could be cut with a batter knife fell upon the crowd."

It Was Alive.

There are in the Book Monthly some "Memories of Mark Twain," chiefly in London, by his cousin, Katherine Clemens. One of the stories told is connected with a visit the humorist paid to Mme. Tussaud's. While in the famous show he stood a long while in contemplation of an especially clever stab of pain in his side and, turning quickly, found himself face to face with a dumfounded British matron, with her parasol still pointed toward him. "Oh, Lor', it's alive!" she exclaimed and beat a hasty retreat.
