

ORATORS ARE MANY IN PRESENT SENATE

troublesome question of naming new judges will be solved is uncertain. The bill may be killed as the only solution.

Local Man May Get Relief. There is a movement on foot for an appropriation for George Nestling, of Dallas, who, while a member of the National Guard, was injured at rifle practice a couple of years ago. It is said that several members of both houses have been interviewed in the matter and the prospects are said to be bright for a small appropriation for Mr. Nestling.

There are rumors of investigations all along the line, including a probe of the Oregon National Guard and the general staff in connection with the alleged "mutiny" at Gate, Washington, at the time of the annual maneuvers last August. If the investigation comes, friends of the officers and men who were ousted from the Guard at the order of the general staff declare that some interesting results will be forthcoming.

Will Go A-Junketing. Both the Senate and House voted on Monday to accept Samuel Hill's invitation to visit the new roads constructed under the supervision of the latter at Lyle and Maryhill, Washington, and February 9 was decided on as the date for making the trip, that day coming on Sunday, when legislative functions will not be interfered with. There was no opposition to the proposition in either branch, all members voting unanimously.

Senator Kiddle Gets Decision. The time of the senate was taken up for a large share of the afternoon Monday in hearing arguments on the contest instituted by John Holton against Ed E. Kiddle, of Union and Wallawa counties. The debate came on the adoption of the minority report of the committee signed by Senator McCulloch, the Democratic member from Baker county, which provided that the recount should be extended to all the precincts in the contested district, rather than the few which had been recounted and which showed that Kiddle and Holton were tied for the place. The majority report declared that, inasmuch as Holton had not shown that he had received more votes than Kiddle, he was not entitled to the seat. The vote finally resulted in the defeat of the minority report and the adoption of the majority report, which makes Kiddle a permanent member of the senate. The result was a foregone conclusion from the outset, and the only result of bringing it up was to give some of the senators an opportunity to work off some heated coals.

Both branches adjourned early in the afternoon Monday, in order to attend a public hearing on the workmen's compensation act, held in the hall of the house of representatives, where the joint committees of the house and senate, before whom the bill will come, listened to arguments for and against the measure. The general sentiment appears to be that the bill will pass in substantially the same form in which it has been published.

More Election Bills Appear. More bills were introduced in the senate Monday seeking to amend the election laws and the corrupt practices act, this sort of proposed legislation appearing popular. Another notable proposed measure was one introduced by Senator Perkins, of Multnomah, which provides certain regulations for the sale of firearms, and requires that all dealers must obtain a license to sell revolvers and there is considerable real tape to be observed by the purchaser of the revolver, the idea of the author of the bill being to make it impossible for one to purchase a revolver without going through a certain medium and calculated to "cool off his anger" and make him "forego the pleasure of shooting up somebody in the heat of passion."

Both branches will vote today upon a candidate for United States senator, and will meet in joint conference tomorrow to ratify the choice of the people as expressed at the November election, in accordance with statement No. 1. The result is a foregone conclusion.

EUGENE FOSTER.

Matthew Strickland, mentioned in our English writer looks at the "new bill," was the most remarkable true story of his time. He had neither bank, money, nor any sign. From his shabby, worn, ragged, and shabby clothes, and using his back there were several rows of medals. He had the blue eyes characteristic of the old species and a queer, grizzled beard.

Large Bridge Goes Down. What is supposed to have been a weakness in the construction of the large county bridge over the Luckiamute, two miles this side of Falls City, caused the structure to sink Sunday with its own weight. The matter was reported by Mill Grant, carrier on Route 2 yesterday. This bridge is supported by a 72-foot span, and was rebuilt last fall. The carrier will of necessity be compelled to miss several of the patrons of this route for awhile, under the present conditions. In speaking of the breakdown, Mr. Grant said it was very fortunate that there was no one on the bridge at the time, as there would have been no chance of escaping death, judging by the manner in which the structure collapsed.

BROOK HARNESSSED BY FARMER

MOUNTAIN STREAM FURNISHES WATER AS WELL AS POWER. Rural School and Farmers Get Water at Low Cost by Co-operation; Family Washing Made Easy.

J. H. Brown on Route 1, Dallas, offers in a communication to The Observer some pertinent suggestions as to the construction of co-operative water systems in the rural communities that will be of value where conditions are favorable. Mr. Brown has given the system a practical test and thinks that the results of the study could profit by his experience. With his father and brother in the work of reconstruction and starting in the expense, a reservoir was dug and placed with cement, the reservoir being fed by a creek, the tank being placed above the point to be supplied, so that gravity would furnish the force. The reservoir was made of oblong shape and a half feet high. It is deep, having about 20 barrels of water, the tank furnishing a continual supply. The supply pipe was placed about four inches from the bottom of the tank, the outlet being covered with a double covering of the heavy milk-canister rim. The main pipe was large and smaller pipes leading to the homes are used, but still large enough to give a full supply and plenty of force, so that water meters are used to operate washing machines, 1000 across the entire end of the plant, and Mr. Brown says the amount would not be increased for the removal of the plant. The rural school near by is furnished with water free of charge, the drainage having furnished the pipe, and the school also supplied a sanitary sink and hose connection, to be used in case of fire and for scrubbing and washing of the walls and windows of the school house grounds.

With a fall of 200 feet, Mr. Brown claims to have 100 pounds of pressure, and thinks many locations could have equally good water supply if the matter was taken up in earnest by several neighbors at the same time. The correspondent thinks that the time is near when all the good water rights will be swallowed up by the corporations and the farmers should take early action in supplying their needs while they can get the water for little cost.

In buying pipe, it is suggested that it be larger than may be naturally thought necessary and, regarding the proper size of pipe to be used and for any other information, Mr. Brown says he is willing to answer any questions by those addressing him as above.

GLEE CLUB IS CHEERED

O. A. C. Singers Are Given Ovation at Every Appearance; At Armory Next Saturday.

Dallas will have the opportunity at the local Armory on January 25, to hear the O. A. C. Glee Club's musical recital before it leaves on its tour of the southern part of the state. The occasion unusually will be a distinguished one. The glee club in the concert given this season thus far has won in each appearance an ovation, and has not only been applauded but even cheered, which is unusual for some of the conservative places visited.

It is not too much to say that the present glee club is on an equal with, or even better than the organization of last year, as a concert attraction, offering as it does such a variable program.

The program indeed has been arranged to please the desires of all. Commencing with the difficult compositions by Buck and Trotter, rendered by the glee club, it continues with a series of quartet specialties, readings, piano solos, caricature drawings, Scotch monologues, and ends with a light but pleasing college fantasia.

SNOW KING REIGNS ON BORDER OF PACIFIC

provision of the city marshal, was brought into service to clear the long stretches of walks and also was used to clear the middle of the streets for vehicles. This unique device for "bucking" of snow is a home-made contrivance and attracted general attention. It was propelled by a team of horses and did the work quickly. An army of business men and employees were also busy at all times in the effort to keep walks clear for travel.

Logging Operations Cease. The work in the logging camps stopped and the mills accordingly closed down. The Dallas Lumber & Logging company, which had intended to renew work after having been closed down for some time for overhauling of the mill, decided to postpone any proposed work until after the camps are able to supply the logs. The company also stopped the work in the yards and at the plant until the snow could be cleared for work. It is expected that work at these places will be resumed this week.

Fruit Trees Uninjured. Fear for the safety of the orchards was felt for a time, but on Sunday the benevolent warmth of the south sea breeze removed the frost of the fruit-growers, who said they could see much of benefit in the situation of the Snow King. This being the case, it was thought, would secure the greatest measure to the city and counties of Eastern Oregon, where heavy snows are a guarantee of good crops.

Snowball Battles Furious. Young America made the best of the situation and indulged in "snowball" while snowballs are good, and as a result the Saturday program became rather rough in spots.

A couple of grass widows and sprinkling of other late-birds and frigate were good-naturedly harassed by members of the O. A. C. on Main street, and some of the latest ones came to the defense, with the result that Night Office Guard came to the rescue (most of the boys, but some of the girls) who assisted in carrying the weak birds far. On Sunday numerous "grass widows" and "bills" were seen on the streets, and there was now and then the single of the old-time Yuletide Eastern people like. Telling a number of those from the districts were about with their delivering produce, the roads have been broken sufficient for travel.
