To Attract Fair Visitors.

Railroads and commercial bodies are in league with each other to attract the Panama-Pacific Exposition travel in 1915 through Oregon and Washington, either en route to the fair or on the return trip. Since many in the East are already planning their trip west, it is thought necessary to start the work early in order to reach the greatest number of prospective fair visitors.

Service for Fruit Districts.

The weather bureau has inaugurated a special service for the fruit districts of the state during April and May. Trained men will be placed in the chief fruit districts, who will be prepared to notify fruit growers just what temperature may be expected on frosty mornings. It is thought that in this way damage may be greatly lessened by timely warnings.

Artesian Wells in Crook.

Artesian water has been struck in Crook county, an it is believed it will be of great benefit to farmers and stockmen. The flow was struck at a depth of 197 feet.

How Torrent Rushed Through Columbus.

Photo copyright, 1913, by American Press Association. This picture gives an idea of the difficulties that beset the rescuers of flood victims. The water rushed through the streets with tremendous velocity, forming whirlpools and eddies that threatened to swamp boats.

Using Ropes to Make Rescues at Dayton.

Photo copyright, 1913, by American Press Association. The waters at Dayton rose so rapidly that many who started to escape found they could not successfully breast the waves. Ropes were stretched across the streets in many places, and by clinging to these ropes those who were marooned reached safety.

Houses Smashed by Dayton Flood.

Photo copyright, 1913, by American Press Association. Many houses in Dayton were swept from their foundations to be hurled against other buildings by the water which swept through the streets as if through a millrace.

How Ohio Flood Stopped Traffic.

Rescuing Sufferers at Dayton.

Photo copyright, 1913, by American Press Association. Cables were strung from telegraph and telephone poles to reach persons marooned on house-tops or upper floors. The crowd in the foreground had thus been rescued and are waiting to be taken away in carriages or autos.

How Buildings Were Wrecked In Omaha.

Photo copyright, 1913, by American Press Association. This picture was made within a few hours after Omaha had been wrecked by the tornado. It shows the appearance of Lake street at the intersection of Twenty-fourth. Not a building was left here with its roof intact, and many walls were blown down.

Where Many Were Killed In Omaha Tornado.

Photo copyright, 1913, by American Press Association. This picture shows the damage done at the corner of Lake and Twenty-fourth streets, Omaha. Twelve persons were killed here, several of them being passengers in the trolley car which was wrecked. Others died in the houses nearby which were demolished. This was directly in the heart of the storm's path.

Wrecked Residence Section In Omaha.

Photo copyright, 1913, by American Press Association. This shows North Twentieth street and the Boulevard, a residence section that suffered heavily in the Omaha tornado. Mrs. Fitzgerald and Mrs. Bigelow were killed here.

Omaha Moving Picture Show Wrecked.

Photo copyright, 1913, by American Press Association. This photograph shows what was left of the Diamond moving picture theater after the storm had passed through Omaha. The loss of lives here was heavy. Many bodies were not recovered for days because of the delay due to a snowstorm.

Section of Stricken Omaha.
