After the usual greeting all repaired to the large reception room, where a beautiful yew tree, laden with presents, had been arranged. The room was tastily decorated with wreaths of Oregon grape and bunches of mistletoe while festoons of evergreen covered the ceiling, radiating from a chandelier in the center. The minutes of the last meeting were read giving the family tree of this particular branch of the Butler family and new names of the past year were added. The registration at this meeting was 123, of which 65 were present. Following this a program was rendered consisting of recitations by the little folk while singing and short speeches were indulged in by the older ones. At the conclusion of the program the merry jingle of Santa's sleigh bells were heard approaching from the house top. Dressed in his robes of fur and carrying a pack of toys he entered the room to the open eyed amazement of the little folks, and greatly to the amusement of the others. After Santa's departure the presents were distributed and an hour was spent visiting, enjoying the presents and reviewing the events of the past year. Then a lunch was served, consisting of sandwiches, cake, hot coffee, sweet cider and old fashioned "twisters"; after which the tree was removed, the canvass was stretched and the entire company made merry with singing, dancing and music. The violin which furnished the music is more than a century old having been brought across the plains in 1849 by J. B. V. Butler, now deceased, who was the head of this branch of the family. Guests and friends were present from various parts of Oregon and Washington. As the wee sma' hours approached the entire company joined in singing Auld Lang Syne and departed for their homes promising to return in another year to the annual gathering.

The Christmas number of the Salem Journal was a very creditable one and gives a great deal of information of the resources of Polk county.
