After traveling through a half dozen states looking at fine stock, F. E. Lynn of Perrydale has brought back to Oregon with him 21 head of the finest pure bred Jersey cattle that he could secure. They were bought in Kentucky 8 cows, 11 heifers and 2 bulls.

The Salem Christmas Journal contained many items about profitable yields, a few Polk county samples being as follows: Four cherry trees, $13 each; about $140 from a 500 foot row of strawberries; $750 clear from 5 and one-half acres of fruit and berries; $220 from one acre of strawberries; $262 from one acre of strawberries; four cherry trees yield $40 a year; $14,000 off a 40 acre tract, and so on.

The packing houses now being erected at Portland will require large numbers of hogs. Dairying and hog raising go together. Polk county has much land good for dairying purposes, and could produce many hogs for the Portland markets. Take the advice of a college professor and save the calves. Let the calves become milkers, finish local creameries with butter fat, and feed the separated milk to hogs.

With the completion of the Oregon Electric road to Forest Grove the first of the year, the first great stride towards giving us an electric outlet has been made. We may safely predict that within two years the road will be completed to Corvallis and that Monmouth will be a station on the line. It isn't necessary that the line come right into the town, or up to the postoffice, for Monmouth will reach out to not less than two miles to the westward before that time, therefore the road will have to go through the town or make a wide detour. Again the Oregon Electric is not the only road that will run through this section of the state in a few years. The United Railways promise to have their road completed as far as Forest Grove before the end of the present year, which means that it will be here a year later. With one of the richest fruit and dairy sections of the coast at our door we should be one of the wealthiest communities in a few years.

New Naturalization Process.

Government Examining Officer Smith, who investigates petitions for naturalization, under a recent law, appeared before Judge Burnett today in the examination of petitioners for naturalization. J. Wright was admitted to citizenship, being a resident of Polk county. Owing to the fact that Wright resided in another county, the examiner thought he would be compelled to raise an objection but could allow the recognition of the papers, however. Hanna Keneela was given naturalization papers without question. Samuel Stotter, another resident of Polk county was admitted, but the examiner wished the same objection granted as in the former case. Hereafter Judge Burnett will instruct all the clerks in his judicial district not to issue petitions for naturalization to residents outside the county in which they are making their home, and in this manner do away with the necessary objections of the government examiner. The present cases were the first to come up in the Marion county court, and the main objection of the examiner is based on not sufficient publicity of the petitioner under such circumstances. —Salem Journal.

ceased animals, which has been developed in Denmark, was described by Dr. Bernard Bang, director of the Royal Veterinary and Agricultural College at Copenhagen, in a recent address before students of the University of Wisconsin College of Agriculture. Prof. Bang, after careful inspection of the work on bovine tuberculosis done by the Wisconsin Experiment Station, gave the students a brief history of his efforts to control the disease in Denmark.

The essential features of his system are: First, careful testing all animals in the herd with tuberculin, and second, removal of reacting animals and retention of healthy ones in quarters to prevent transmittal of the disease to those uninfected; third, disinfection of stables to prevent development of the disease through germs left by diseased animals; fourth, regular testing of the healthy herd to remove cases that may develop, before they spread the disease to others; and fifth, removal of calves from cows of the infected herd at once that they may be fed on milk from the healthy cows or on pasteurized milk.

When the disease is merely local in the animal, Dr. Bang said there was no good reason for slaughtering it. Most calves from tuberculous cows, he said, are free from the disease and will continue healthy if removed from the cow at birth. It is not an expensive operation to follow this method of segregation, he demonstrated, since it has been proven that on both large and small farms the care in feeding can be managed that infection will not be carried from the diseased to the healthy herds.
