Why We Don't Grow Flowers

Dear Editor: In a recent number of the Herald you ask why we did not grow more flowers. Some do not through laziness, but a far greater number do not for lack of water. Pansies, sweet peas, asters, dahlias, gladiolus, and even the rose need more water than the most of us have, or can get under present conditions. If the City owned and controlled a good water system, what fine flowers we could have. But there are a few like "Fax" who can not see any beauty in anything but a cabbage.

Go to a town where there is plenty of water and on coming home notice the difference. It is no wonder that people coming to the state want to locate where there is green lawns and flowers blooming. Let us take steps toward getting a water system and not be like the ancient Chinaman thinking what was good enough for our great grand-fathers is good enough for us.

The Wrist and the Arm.
The real wrist, as one might say, is the elbow joint. It is all hand, practically speaking, from that point to the tips of the fingers. When you turn your wrist it is the whole forearm that makes the twist, and every movement of the fingers is controlled by the muscles of the forearm. The power to turn the wrist to and fro at the elbow joint is possessed only by human beings and monkeys, and even the higher apes are not able to do the trick nearly as well as we can. In this movement the great biceps muscle in the upper arm is importantly concerned, its powerful action in turning the forearm outward being accountable for the fact that we are able to put so much more strength into a twist in that direction than the opposite way. Many of our most familiar tools indeed, such as the screwdriver, are made with reference to the anatomical peculiarity in question. It is for this reason and no other that all screws turn to the right.
