An Intelligent Dog

A Lincoln county man, living alone in an insulated cabin, became sick and unable to walk, tied a message around his collie dog's neck, and told him, in the night, to "go," and though the dog had not been away from the place for six months he went through the woods and storm eight miles to the house of a relative of his master's, who read the message, summoned a doctor, and the man's life was saved. Yet some people argue learnedly that a dog can't reason. There are plenty of human beings who haven't a better reasoning apparatus than this dog.—Portland Journal.
