Mrs. J. W. Richardson of Independence was over, Friday, and spent the afternoon with the HERALD family. Mrs. Richardson has served several years at the case, as a typo, and hence, could not resist the desire to throw in a few handfuls of type, just in remembrance of old associations.

In another column will be found the card of J. S. Smith of Airlie. Mr. Smith is an able auctioneer and is bidding for employment of that nature and guarantees his work. In speaking to our reporter he remarked that when he cries a sale if the party who employed him can find three of his neighbors who will say that he has not performed his work faithfully and sold the property for all it is worth, he will forego his salary and pay his employer something besides.

Report came in that the Herald's typo was out Sunday, for a trip through the country, and that the course lay through Independence, Rickreall, almost including Salem, with a return home by way of Dallas. Reporter will not depose and say whether she was alone or otherwise, but from the places visited and the distance covered, the party must have much resembled a fascinating Brown streak perambulating over a variegated landscape followed by a cloud of dust.

George Sullivan met with an accident, Tuesday evening, that gave him quite a jolt and scarred his visage to some extent, while slaughtering a beef. He knocked down the animal which fell against the gate upon which he was perched at the time of striking; the brute fell against the gate breaking the rope with which the gate was tied. Mr. Sullivan was thrown to the floor quickly and struck on his head. He received a cut across the bridge of the nose and also feels the effect of the fall in his shoulders. He was not injured to the extent of having to lay off for repairs.

D. M. Hampton, the hotel manager, dropped into our sanctum, two days ago and it is pretty hard to divine his business, but it appears as though he was seeking a conference with the "devil," however on the appearance of one of Monmouth's blithe widows he decamped immediately. He didn't want too much notoriety.

T. D. Hayworth, a civil engineer, and F. M. Thompson, a real estate man, both from Portland were in town Saturday, the latter having come into this section to look up a location for a friend, while Mr. Hayworth was having a look around the country. The latter had paid a visit to the Whiteaker oil well and spoke very flatteringly of the prospects for oil. He is acquainted with the Pennsylvania oil regions and those of other places and says that the drillers are in the oil bearing sand at the Whiteaker well, but that it is a shade finer sand than that of the Pennsylvania region. He says the oil prospects are good.

Announcement.

Heretofore Those of our customers who were not satisfied with anything less than perfect fitting garments have chosen their clothing from the sample books of M. Born & Co., of Chicago. For years we have been rendering satisfactory service to our customers in this way; yet we found that many had difficulty in judging of the appearance of the finished suit because of the small size of the sample shown.

For all such we have good news in that we will shortly be able to show them in addition to the usual samples, a goodly assortment of patterns in one and one-half yard lengths. These large swatches draped on the customer show the effect of the pattern as will the finished suit, and one may make their selection of cloth with the assurance that the suit will please them when it arrives.
