HIS BILL WAS WELL PAID.

A Story of Daniel Webster's Generosity and Kindly Humor.

Daniel Webster's generosity, his love of kindly humor and his genuine neighborliness appear characteristically in an anecdote recorded by Professor W. C. Wilkinson in his book, "Daniel Webster." The story is vouched for by Mr. W. T. Davis.

Once, on Mr. Webster's return to Marshfield from Washington, a neighbor called with a bill for hay. Mr. Webster told him that if he would call on the next Monday he would have the money ready for him. After the man left Mr. Webster said to his son Fletcher:

"I think that I have paid that bill. I wish you would see if you can find a receipt."

Fletcher found two receipts.

"Let those bills lie there," said Mr. Webster, "and when our friend calls next Monday we will have some fun with him."

On Monday the farmer called just before dinner, and Mr. Webster said, "Come, neighbor, have dinner with me, and then we will talk business." After dinner they went out and sat under the shady elm tree near the house, and after a little general conversation Mr. Webster said:

"Mr. N., do you keep books? I advise you by all means to keep books. Now if you had kept books you would have known that I had paid this bill once," and he handed him one of the receipts.

Mr. N. was greatly mortified and charged himself with inexcusable

After some further conversation Mr. Webster again said, "Mr. N., you don't know how important it is to keep books," and handing him a second receipt, added: "If you had kept books you would have known that I have paid this bill twice. Now I am going to pay it just once more, but I don't believe that I shall ever pay it again."

Mr. N., overwhelmed with surprise, protested that when able he would refund the money.

"No, Mr. N.," said Mr. Webster. "You are a poor man, and I know you to be honest. Keep the money, and when you have any more hay to sell bring me a load, and I will buy it."
