Unknown Substance.

While the workmen under Henry Voth were working at the county quarry last week they ran into a pocket of some sort of a substance that so far has baffled all comers to give it a name. It looks like amber, is very brittle, and you can easily read through a piece a couple of inches in thickness. Pieces of all thicknesses were found, ranging in size from a crumpled up piece to several inches. It is not a ledge, but there seemed to be a sort of pocket of it, and it was found almost 20 feet below the top of the quarry. Some of our geologists can now get busy and name it, or a sample will be sent to the Agricultural college.—Dallas Itemizer.
