The 4th passed off very quietly in Monmouth. A good many residents spent the day away from here. Several picnic parties went through in the morning and judging from the noise that was made they were celebrating in good shape. At the time of going to press no fatalities had been reported in the city, and it is hoped that it will pass over without accident. The Normal will hold a celebration tonight, and out side of that there will not be much going on.

A Gypsy Prophecy.

An English magazine relates a curious instance of gypsy prophecy. The third Earl of Malmesbury, as Lord Fitzharris, was riding to a yeomanry review near Christchurch when his orderly, some distance in front, ordered a gypsy woman to open a gate. The gypsy woman quietly waited till Lord Fitzharris and his staff rode up, when she addressed them, saying, "Oh, you think you are a lot of fine fellows now, but I can tell you that one day your bones will whiten in that field." Lord Fitzharris laughed and asked her whether she thought they were going to have a battle, adding it was not very likely in that case they would choose such a spot. More than forty years later the field was turned into a cemetery.

Father Fixed It.

Her Father—My boy, I like you, and I want you to marry my girl. But have you spoken to her mother about it?

Suitor—No, sir.

H. F.—Then, to make it a sure thing for you, I'll oppose the match. —Boston Transcript.

The Emperor in France.

"One anecdote of the Grand Duchess Olga is vouched for," says Kellogg Durland in his "Royal Romances of Today." "One day a professor from Moscow was giving the Grand Duchess Olga a lesson in history. A lady in waiting was sitting by, as usual, to insure that no dangerous doctrines are taught. Suddenly Olga looked at her teacher and asked, 'Who is emperor of France?' The professor felt that this was an embarrassing question, for it was as yet far too early to undertake the explanation of a republican system of government. The lady in waiting, however, was equal to the occasion, for, seeing the embarrassment of the professor, she answered, 'In France the emperor is called president!'"

Oldest Universities.

The oldest universities on the continent of Europe are those of Bologna, Paris and Salamanca. In England Oxford and Cambridge are the most ancient. Many of the earlier universities were the outgrowth of the intellectual movement known as "Scholasticism." Great scholastics like Abelard and others would draw about them crowds of young men to listen to their lectures, and the lectures were followed by the permanent institution known as the university. In such way Abelard became the practical founder of the University of Paris.

The Unexpected.

It was on a Newton-Brighton surface car. The conductor was calling out the names of the streets. Suddenly he called in a clear, loud voice, "Eleanor, Eleanor!" Imagine the passengers' surprise when a small, pretty young lady looked up from a book and said, "Well, what is it?" There is a difference of opinion as to whether the joke was on the young lady or the conductor. —Boston Journal.

A Modern Girl.

"Why did you turn him down?" "He began to yap about two living as cheaply as one. When I get married I expect to make the money fly." —Washington Herald.
