The HERALD force has had lagrippe this week and the HERALD looks like it had had a case too, but as the force are back on the job again we expect that the HERALD will pull through all right next week. Joe withstood it.

Word was received yesterday of the death of Mr. George U. Stackpole, brother of Mrs. John Remington, who died suddenly in his home in Chicago, presumably of heart disease. He lived in Monmouth for a time and was about seventy-two years old.

Friend Griffa is having hard luck, so the report goes. He can't get any hot water and he says he don't think the town board appreciates his troubles. Then to smooth over his worries a by-stander helps matters along by saying that C. G. is just getting a taste of what he has been dishing out for ten years. However he might build a fire outside and boil some rain water.

Helping the Engineer.

During a strike on a railway much difficulty was experienced in finding engineers to keep the necessary trains running. One of the substitutes, a young fellow, ran some distance past a station, and then, putting back, ran as much too far the other way. He was preparing to make a third attempt when the station agent shouted, to the great amusement of the passengers: "Never mind, Bob; stay where you are. We'll shift the station."
