O. A. C. Girl Student Lost in Mary's River

CORVALLIS, ORE., April 21.—Miss Kate O'Connor, a junior student in the Domestic Science Department of O. A. C., whose home is in Montague, Cal., was drowned in the Mary's River, four miles above this city, late yesterday afternoon, while canoeing with Robert Savage, of Salem, a sophomore, the accident occurring as the result of striking a log while attempting to turn in the extremely swift water of the river. The girl went down and did not again rise to the surface, and her companion, himself thrown into the water, was unable to save her.

R. J. Chrisman, G. Schumaker and G. Stambach, students from the college, witnessed the accident and gave every assistance in trying to save the girl, but without avail, and it was not until a large searching party had been organized and a search made for four hours, that the body was taken out of the river.

The party left the college at 3 o'clock yesterday afternoon to spend the afternoon on the river.

Every Farm Home Should Have Furnace Room

"Every farm home should have a basement room with furnace heat, where the men of the family could remove their muddy, wet garments, and where they could wash before going into the kitchen and dining room," said Mrs. Henrietta W. Calvin, dean of home economics at the Oregon Agricultural College, in a recent lecture before farm women.

"No small amount of dissention would thus be removed, and the floors would be kept clean," she continued. "Poor floors are hard to keep clean and give poor returns for the labor expended upon them. With furnaces, good floor, a convenient and abundant water supply, a bath room in place of the poor conveniences ordinarily supplied, an adequate lighting system and electric machinery there would be many housekeepers, now discontented, who would become happy home makers.

"The movement from farm to town can never be checked until the woman on the farm is made as comfortable and as contented as her town sister. If she can have the comforts and conveniences allowed the townswoman, together with the satisfaction and comforts of a farm, she will use her efforts to keep her own home on the farm and to encourage her daughters to establish their's there also."
