"What are Letters of Credit?" said an idle spectator, "or, rather, what is there in connection with them that causes such profound secrecy so that closed doors and drawn blinds figure in their identification?" Nothing whatever to avoid the rush.

Dallas Had a Blaze

Word reached here Sunday from Dallas of fire that had started that morning destroying a restaurant and store before it was checked. The following account is from the Dallas Observer:

"Damage approximating $4,000 was caused by a fire which originated from some unknown cause in the rear of the building on Main street occupied by B. R. Watson's second hand store, early Sunday morning, and which completely destroyed the Watson building and the building on the corner occupied by the "Sunrise restaurant" owned and operated by Lloyd Kohari. The Campbell building adjoining the restaurant on the east was also damaged to the extent of between $250 and $300. Buildings across Main street were damaged somewhat by the heat which blistered the paint and cracked some of the plate glass. The skylight on the brick and concrete building owned by E. C. Kirkpatrick which adjoined the Watson store on the north was also broken by the heat but the loss there is nominal.

"When first discovered, the entire interior of the Watson building was a mass of flames and the occupants of the Kohari restaurant who were asleep in the upper story had barely time to escape with only a small portion of their personal effects. From the Watson building the fire quickly communicated to the two-story restaurant on the south and it too was blazing furiously, sending huge columns of smoke and cinders high into the air. At one time the flames from the burning restaurant roared upward fully as high as the court house dome and made a very spectacular display. The fire department responded promptly and soon Chief Risser had three streams playing on the blaze. The heat was intense and it was with difficulty that the nifty fighters held the hose.

"But there never was a more competent and orderly fight waged on any fire. There was a noticeable lack of confusion, and every move made by the firemen appeared to have a definite object. The streams of water were placed where they were needed and soon the blazing corner was hemmed in on all sides by streams of water which saved the other buildings and practically confined the destruction to the restaurant and the second hand store. When it is known that the adjoining building on the east was also of wooden construction the fact that the fire was confined to the buildings first attacked is considered remarkable."

Mrs. A. A. Catron had her garden very badly destroyed during Saturday night by a couple of cows belonging to Landlord Schauer. The cows are not to blame as there was good picking there and the cattle made the best of the opportunity. Schauer may not be to blame either because his cattle got away from their moorings, as the story is out that a trio of boys were out to see what they could scare and that through their influence the cows were made to break loose and let go where they pleased. Mrs. Catron has been damaged and ought to be reimbursed and the boys should be taught to keep in their beds at night and not cause other persons trouble.

A dearth in labor has caused the price of leading cows to the northwestward to soar skyward.
