A HOPEFUL OULOOK

Mixed with the troubles and contention that has been growing between labor and capital, employes and employers, are some movements which give rise to hope that future methods may curtail the evils which arise from wide-spread strikes.

In the matter of the threatened Railroad strike President Wilson has appointed three men of high standing and character to serve upon the board of Mediation, and they are now engaged in endeavoring to bring about an amicable adjustment of controversies concerning wages, hours of labor and working conditions on the part of railroads in the United States, including the controversy over interchange of rights and seniority between the Southern Pacific company and the Order of Railway Conductors and the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen.

While of late years there has been more or less effort made to settle and control strike situations, yet, generally speaking, very little was accomplished, and too often, the effort consisted in calling out armed force to quell disturbances, while but little was done to bring about equity and justice and very little, if anything, was accomplished toward bringing about better conditions between labor and capital.

The knowledge is becoming general that employes have rights which must be respected as well as those of employers, and that these rights are equal, but the interests of the general public have mostly been kept in the back-ground heretofore, and while such has been the case the general public has been no less the loser because of these strikes on the part of labor unions.

That these efforts of adjustment, in the interest of peace, humane and prosperous conditions, may ultimately succeed is the hope and desire of every peace and justice-loving citizen, but notwithstanding what our hopes may be, nor with what roseate optimism we may view the future, the fact remains that there are two factions to deal with, and their grievances are of long standing and have been nursed and cherished until it takes but little provocation to cause angry contentions to spring up which are easily converted into lawless acts which often lead to destruction of property and of life.

Efforts to adjust these difficulties amicably, and keep them adjusted, should have been undertaken more seriously when these differences began to arise but conditions have been let run their course until animosity has reached such proportions that equity will be hard to establish.

HAIR SWITCHES made from combings. Enquire at this office.

One of the most striking evidences that the government is really attempting to exercise its rights for the protection of the people at large, is the fact that Secretary McAdoo of the Treasury Department has notified the banks in the Southern and Western parts of the country that he was ready to deposit with them $50,000,000 for the express purpose of moving the crops. Heretofore, crop moving time has always been a serious one with country bankers, for the farmer was a large borrower and could not repay until crops were sold. This made it a time of stress to the entire country. By the method proposed this stress will be obviated. The secretary has taken ample precaution for the return of all the money advanced. The money will be placed in National banks in such sections as it is believed necessary.—The Ranch.

What is this we read? Secretary McAdoo of the United States telling the newspapers that Wall street bankers are a lot of "pirates" and should be put out of business. Is it possible we have a President and Secretary who dare run the treasury department without asking Wall street? The world is really moving, and the best proof of it is that republican papers are not criticising, but applauding the action of the secretary in placing $50,000,000 in Western and Southern banks to move the crops. The secretary went further and said that Wall street was knocking the United States bond market. We have more hopes now than for years that the people are really learning that the government is their own and does not belong to a lot of four flushers in New York City.—The Ranch.
