The Range with a Reputation Should Be In Your Kitchen

Some of the Real Reasons Why—

The Great Majestic is a perfect baker—absolutely dependable, every day, year in, year out. Baked on top of it, you get the best of everything. It is a perfect range—outwears three ordinary ranges.

Only a range made of charcoal and malleable iron can resist rust 300% greater than steel.

Perfect Baker—Fuel Saver

All joints riveted, practically air-tight—oven is lined with pure asbestos board—assures even baking heat, saves half of fuel.

Patron-teacher's Meeting And Basket Social

A Patron-teacher's meeting and Basket Social was held at the Spring Valley School House, Saturday evening, November 15. The School rendered a short program which was followed by a general discussion of the plans for the school for 1913-14. It was decided that the school, with the aid and co-operation of the patrons of the district, should take up in an effective way the Industrial Work as it is being carried on in so many of our schools.

The latter part of the evening was given to the sale of the baskets and the supper. Mr. Fred Simkins sold the baskets and proved to all concerned, his ability as an auctioneer.

The proceeds amounted to $30.30, all of which is to be used to improve the furnishings of the school house.

Remanded to Asylum

Puy L. Ward, of Luckiamute, was brought before the County Court yesterday and for the third time remanded to the asylum. Two assistants of that institution came over and took him to Salem Monday evening. Judge Teal remarked that he thought that the attendants were unduly rough in their treatment of the man who was in a bad condition. —Observer.

Sold Prune Output

W. G. Fisher, representing the J. K. Armsby Co. prune packers of Dallas, Oregon, was in Monmouth yesterday and closed up a deal for the output for the Monmouth Evaporating Company the consideration being a matter of $60,000.00. This is a considerable amount that comes to this vicinity for prunes. The crop this year was larger than that of last season, but the prunes of the preceding season were larger, hence of a better quality.

BERLIN'S FINE STREETS.

Not Even a Scrap of Paper Mars Their Well Kept Pavements.

He is a fortunate traveler who enters Berlin from the west and toward the end of his journey rolls along over the twelve or fifteen miles of new streets, glides under the Brandenburg Tor and finds himself in Unter den Linden. The Kaiserdamm, Bismarckstrasse, Berlinerstrasse, Charlottenburger-chaussee, Unter den Linden, give the most splendid street entrance into a city in the world. The pavement is without a hole, without a crack and as clear of rubbish of any kind as a well kept kitchen floor. The cleanliness is so noticeable that one looks searchingly for even a scrap of paper, for some trace of negligence, to modify this superiority over the streets of our American cities. But there is no consolation. The superiority is so incontestable that no comparison is possible. For the whole twelve or fifteen miles the streets are lined with trees or shrubs or flowers, with well kept grass and with separate roads on each side for horsemen and foot passengers. In the spring and summer the streets are a veritable garden.

Broadway is eighty feet wide, Fifth avenue is 100 feet wide, the Champs Elysees is 233 feet wide, and Unter den Linden is 196 feet wide and has seventy feet of roadway.

The streets are cleaned for the benefit of the people and not for the benefit of the pockets of a political aristocracy. The public service is a guardian, not a predatory organization. In our country when a man can do nothing else he becomes a public servant. In Germany he can only become a public servant after severe examinations and ample proofs of fitness. The superiority of one service over the other is moral, not merely mechanical.

The street cleaning department is recruited from soldiers who have served their time, not over thirty-five years of age, and who must pass a doctor's examination and be passed also by the police. The rules as to their conduct, their uniforms, their rights and their duties, down to such minute carefulness as that they may not smoke on duty "except when engaged in peculiarly dirty and offensive labor," are here, as in all official matters in Germany, outlined in labyrinthine detail. Sickness, death, accident, are all provided for with a pension, and there are also certain gifts of money for long service. The police and the street cleaning department co-operate to enforce the law where private companies or the city owned street railways are negligent in making repairs or in replacing pavement that has been disturbed or destroyed. There is no escape. If the work is not done promptly and satisfactorily it is done by the city, charged against the delinquent and collected!—Price Collier's "Germany and the Germans."
