Airlie Notes

Billie McAdams, that genial gentleman, who peddles soda water, peanuts and chewing gum, who runs at large with his face crammed into a smile, escorted a bunch of dogs and some other citizens of our quiet hamlet on a merry chase after a lone jack-rabbit, Sunday. From the fusillade of shot that continued throughout the day one could easily imagine himself sitting on some lonely spot in Old Mexico watching a Spanish battle.

Doc said he killed one, but couldn't produce the evidence and, since the rooster episode, no one would believe him. Doc's some shot. Ace swore he sighted a female. Jacks are scarce, but "Shorty" couldn't keep up as he was carrying a speedometer on his shin and had to stop occasionally to see whether he was moving.

Take it all in all, they had a merry day, returning after dark so as to hide their plunder. One of the party was heard to say, "Well if we didn't kill anything we got to hear the dogs bark."

H. V. Link was in Airlie, Saturday.
