WE WANT SUBSCRIBERS

We are sending out statements to subscribers who are in arrears with the HERALD and would accept it as a great favor, if those who are owing us would send in their renewals.

A newspaper is a necessity in a city or town, and a place that does not have one these days, is looked upon as a thirteen-cent proposition. But, a newspaper must have two things in order to live and be useful. These two things are money and readers. Money alone can produce it, but it must have readers in order to be useful. But, no matter how many readers there are, that will not support it unless there is money behind it.

Often when we approach a person with a request to subscribe, we are informed that the party has the privilege of reading some other person's paper. This is very gratifying to us, but it does not help to keep the HERALD in paper and ink, and to pay for fuel, light and labor, hence, if you are not a supporter of the HERALD you are hereby invited to become one, and we think that every family in the vicinity should be interested sufficiently to afford one copy.

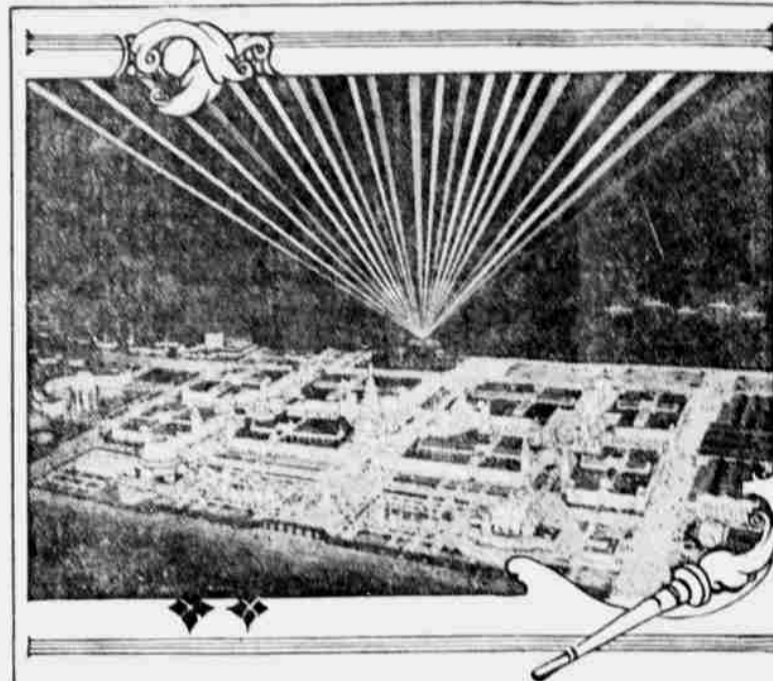

ARE WE FASHION SLAVES?

It is said that "Coming events cast their shadows before." If this be true, judging from the present, what manner of style of dress will the next decade, or even the next five years bring forth?

The old Quaker, in talking with his wife, remarked: "Everybody in the world is queer but thee and me and even thee art getting a little queer." Possibly we may look at these things with too credulous a conception of what the next few years may bring forth, but the kaleidoscopic changes of the past five years will warrant a person in looking for something hideous in the future, as the changes are getting no better very rapidly.

In men's clothing the changes have been less rapid than in those of women. However, the men are getting a little queer, too. It is said that a woman might as well be dead as to be out of style, but what can the average woman do now as the changing styles puts her new suit, or coat, out of season almost before she gets a chance to wear it. This condition, or custom, adds to the cost of high living in a manner that we hardly ever think of as the merchant's goods go out of style too, hence he must make a large profit on what he does sell so as to recompense him for the stock on which he must cut prices to get rid of after the season is over.

When we take a retrospective glance of more than half a century, we can call to mind the changes in men's attire from the swallow-tail coat to the balloon-shaped pantaloons, while those of the women have changed from the sky-scraper bonnet to the more ponderous head-gear of today, while the skirt with prodigious hoop has passed through all the changes down to the hobble-skirt of the present, and we wonder if there will ever come a time when the sons and daughters of Adam will settle down to a common sense custom.

Light Breaks In On Wall Street

An operator in Wall Street has the following to say in the Saturday Post which rather indicates a change of heart when judged by the past:

"In less than a year President Wilson has put the impress of constructive leadership upon the whole country, and this includes Wall Street for the first time. Up to the present it has been the custom of Wall Street to consider itself a sort of thing apart, governed by its own kings, ruled by its own code of business ethics. But that day is gone, and Mr. Wilson has done more than any other one man to bring it about. Fair-minded and open minded men see no menace in this state of affairs.

"Consider a parallel in England. In the old days the king was absolute; now Parliament is all-powerful. Down in Wall Street the old element used to run everything—social, financial and commercial—and no one could dispute their power. But those old combinations are being broken up, and the average man with a little money will have something to say.

"Wall Street believed that Mr. McKinley was the ideal president. Why? Because he stood for the larger property rights. But Mr. Wilson stands for human rights, and by these I mean the rights of the individual, of the small business man, of the small stock and bond holder to have equal protection under the law.

"Mr. Wilson has courage, ability and character. Roosevelt used to argue about everything. Mr. Wilson does little talking, but in his quiet and effective way he has accomplished more in ten months than other presidents have in all their incumbency. He doesn't try to use an axe, but his mind and his uncompromising will to do things his way make the Big Stick look like a toothpick.

"Business in this country can be healthy and vigorous only when it is honest. President Wilson is the doctor who is giving it the safest and best prescription for continued good health."

Andrew Carnegie has made another two million dollar donation in behalf of peace, and this time the endowment is to induce church energy in instructing along peace lines. The Christ message is "Peace on earth good will to men," and just why special inducement should be engendered by Carnegie's millions is difficult to determine. However, Andy may have thought that the "King O' Heaven" was not offering strong enough inducement and concluded to show his hand in the solution of the peace problem. The excessive tolls which Carnegie is collecting off the human family are not likely to make for peace, hence, he may not be altogether a disinterested giver.
