Oregon Hopgrowers And Possible Boycott

With the hopgrowers of the state of Oregon, the sum and substance of the prohibition issue is the revenue they receive from their product. For them the social and the moral side of the issue does not exist, nor is the economical side to be considered any further than it effects their pocketbooks. They assume, whether warrantably or not, that prohibition in this state will mean the boycotting of Oregon hops by brewers all over the country and perhaps all over the world. That assumption carries with it the conclusion that the brewers must be an exceedingly narrow-minded class, for surely any man of intelligence must realize that the hopgrowers of the state are in a hopeless minority, and if the state shall vote wet or dry the responsibility for the result will not be theirs.

We must believe that hops grown in a prohibition state will make quite as good beer as those grown in any other state; and that the fact which will govern the purchase of the hop crop and that will count to the profit or loss of those who raise the crop, will be the price. Buying hops for the manufacture of beer is a matter of business and not a matter of politics or of sentiment. If the hopgrowers of Oregon believe they will be the victims of a boycott in the event of the state going dry, they are easily bullied into that belief by brewers who make the threat for whatever political effect it may have.—Telegram.

Alcohol In Fruit Juices

By a recent decision of the department all fruit juices to which alcohol has been added must be plainly labeled to show this if they are to be shipped in interstate commerce after September 1, 1914. In the opinion of the department, such names as "Peach juice," "Cherry juice" should be applied only to juices which are unfermented and which contain no added sugar, alcohol, or other substances. In the past alcohol has been frequently added as a preservative to these preparations which are used for such purposes as flavoring beverages or preparing cordials. After September 1, however, goods that do not comply with the new ruling and indicate this fact on their labels will be denied entry into this country, and if found in interstate commerce will be subjected to appropriate action by the authorities.

Conundrum, no. Its only a common question. Who is the last man hired and the first man to be fired? Think it over.

Mediation Not A Failure

There is constant suggestion that mediation is about to fail. Although the thing sought to be done by the mediators assembled at Niagara may not be achieved, that conference will not pass into history as a failure.

As the United States is the dominant nation in this hemisphere, its dominancy has come to be regarded by other nations as founded in greed and arrogance and material self-seeking. By the manner in which it accepted the proffer that led to mediation, and by its attitude at Niagara the United States has shown that its genuine greatness rests upon an altogether surer foundation. It has demonstrated that what it desires among its neighbors is justice and good government; and that insofar as it is charged with an international moral responsibility it will endeavor to promote these.

Obviously there are difficulties before the mediators which at times seem insuperable; but it is far from clear wherein there can be any hope entertained in Mexico to better the conditions of government except by acquiescence with plans that will be formulated by the mediators. It must be realized down there that the ultimate settlement of their troubles will devolve upon the wisdom and council of its neighbors, and chief in that must be the influence of the United States. Mediation so far as it has gone has shown that such influence will be exerted only with the best of motives; and there is much to assure us that Mexican intelligence is beginning to comprehend that fact. So far as its immediate purpose is concerned the failure of mediation is not yet a matter of record; and as it denotes a new and an epochal policy in the international politics of this hemisphere, it is and will be pronounced a success.—Telegram.
