Picnic on Luckiamute

On Thursday afternoon a hay rack loaded with fourteen young ladies from the Evangelical Church and their Sunday School teacher, Mrs. Dawson, left Monmouth to enjoy an afternoon on the Luckiamute.

The time was spent in exploring the woods and testing the temperature of the clear water until the bon fire began to crackle. Then each one got her pole with some beef steak on it and roasted it over the fire.

When all of the bountiful picnic luncheon was sampled, a few games were played, then they started on their homeward journey, declaring that a most enjoyable afternoon had been theirs.

"Farmer" Volk Loses Dryer

Gerald Volk, until last April publisher of The Observer, and who last month purchased a ranch near Salem, had the misfortune to lose a prune dryer by fire on Friday afternoon, entailing a financial loss of $1,000, but covered by insurance of $800. It was only by the most desperate efforts of Mr. Volk and the neighbors that the blaze was kept from catching the barn, about seventy-five feet from the drier.

Mr. Volk discovered the fire about 1 o'clock. He was walking toward the drier at the time and noticed a tongue of flame leap from one corner. He ran to the structure and threw open the door, discovering that the entire interior of the building was a mass of flame. It is considered probable that spontaneous combustion was the cause of the blaze.—Observer.
