A MUSTARD POULTICE.

It Raised a Lively Rumpus, and It Didn't Cure the Cold.

Lord Carrington used to be a great practical joker, but he was once the victim of his own reputation. He was at the time stopping at a hotel in Cape Town. In the same hotel were a young couple, and, the husband having a bad cold, the wife left her room to obtain for him the solace of a mustard poultice. She left him asleep and, thinking she knew her way, descended the stairs and, procuring a particularly virulent concoction, made her way back to her room. But doors are much alike in hotels, and, seeing one ajar, as she had left her own, she entered. Creeping quietly to the bedside, she saw, as she thought, the form of her sleeping lord and master. Hastily bending over him, she placed the fatal irritant upon his chest.

No sooner had she done so than a movement of the sleeper revealed, to her horror, that she had made a terrible mistake. Too frightened to recapture the incriminating poultice, she fled from the room and, rushing down the passage, discovered her own door and bolted herself in.

It was but a minute and the storm broke. The hotel was in an uproar. The mustard poultice had been placed on the chest of the corpulent, elderly governor general! The explosion of his wrath, his howls of rage as the mustard did its work, brought servants and manager to his bedside.

The situation did not permit of an explanation. Furious with indignation, he declared himself the victim of a gross joke, and the efforts of the matre d'hotel to pacify him were in vain. He swore that the practical joker was nobody else than Lord Carrington, and the next day, fuming and indignant, left the place.

So did a very contrite young wife and a husband whose cold was no better.

Destiny.

Thoughts go forth to purposes, purposes go forth in actions, actions form habits, habits decide character, and character fixes our destiny.—Tryon Edwards.

Works Both Ways.

An experience of the famous humorist, Bill Nye, with a Chicago bank is related. A stranger in the city, he asked to have a check cashed. The teller demanded that he be identified. After some searching the humorist found an acquaintance who was known also by the bank officials. Nye's check for a considerable sum was cashed. The teller, who in the meantime had been introduced to the applicant, took the liberty of recommending to him, as a matter of prudence, that he redeposit such part of the cash in his possession as he did not need for his immediate use. His friend indorsed this advice. But Nye hesitated, seemed to be thinking deeply and finally said, "All right, but this bank must be properly identified before it gets any of my money."

Unpopular Heroism.

He was a great bore and was talking to a crowd about the coming election. Said he: "Jones is a man; he is capable, honest, fearless and conscientious. He once saved me from drowning."

"Do you really want to see Jones elected?" said a solemn faced old man. "I do, indeed. I'd do anything to see him elected."

"Then never let anybody know he saved your life."—Pittsburgh Chronicle-Telegraph.

His Little Joke.

The ladies of the parish were giving a supper in the church. A lot of people were seated at the different tables, and pretty girls passed here and there waiting on them.

Suddenly the town wit entered. There was a hush over the assembly. We knew it was coming, for the bright one had never failed as yet with a sparkling sally.

Catching the eye of a spinster bringing in a tray of edibles, he bleated, "Well, Miss Sarah, I see you're still waiting at the church."

She smiled in embarrassment, and the youngest folks giggled, but a brother of Miss Sarah snatched up a hefty onion and let the T. W. have it right in the eye.—Florida Times-Union.

As Far as He Got.

One day when William M. Everts, secretary of state under President Hayes, was a college student he was called on to read Vergil in class.

He started out bravely. "Three times I strove to cast my arms around her neck, and— and"—adding lamely—"that's as far as I got, professor."

"Well, Mr. Everts," said the professor, "I think that was quite far enough."

Olive Slices.

Delicious dishes for afternoon refreshment are made interesting by the way in which olives are used with them. For instance, cut brown bread, round loaves, in thin slices, butter or spread them with cream cheese and arrange in the center slices of stuffed olives in the form of flower petals about another slice of olive or a tiny mound of cheese sprinkled with paprika.

The same scheme may be followed out with salted or other crackers, spreading them similarly and decorating with the stuffed olives sliced and arranged in geometrical designs.—Exchange.

Adirondack.

The word "Adirondack" comes to us from the language of the Mohawks. With them it was Ha-de-run-dack and meant wood eaters. This term was applied in derision to a few members of a once powerful branch of the Algonquins, who were defeated by the Iroquois and forced to seek refuge in a fastness of the mountains. They were in great distress, and it is said they sent messengers to their victors asking them to make no further war upon them, as they were reduced to the necessity of eating roots and the bark of trees. A few of them finally escaped to the north, and others were captured and held in slavery by the Mohawks.

Change in Fortunes.

He entered the cafe with an air, he seated himself at a table with a flourish. The chief of the waiters noted him and flew to his elbow.

"Give me the bill of fare," sighed the guest.

"Yes, sir," breathed the waiter.

"By the way, waiter, your face is strangely familiar."

"Possibly, sir. Last year I was a guest here, not a servant. But—if you will pardon me for my presumption—I seem to know your face too."

"Probably. Last year I was a waiter here."

Isn't it pathetic, this renewing of old friendships?—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

"White" a Misnomer.

The fallacy of the average Englishman who regards black as white has been noted by G. K. Chesterton, the English writer. "People," he writes, "never ask whether the current color language is always correct. Ordinary sensible phraseology sometimes calls black white; it certainly calls yellow white and green white and reddish brown white. We call wine 'white wine' which is as yellow as a Bluecoat boy's legs. We call grapes 'white grapes' which are manifestly pale green. We give to the European, whose complexion is a sort of pink drab, the horrible title of 'white man'—a picture more bloodcurdling than any specter in Poe."

The Humming Bird Flower.

Alletto avasisis, the wonderful so called "humming bird flower" of the plains of eastern Turkey, stands unique and alone among the many specimens of floral mimicry that have been classified by modern botanists. It is a beautiful blossom of variegated hues, the total length of the entire flower being about one and three-quarter inches. As one might imagine from its name, it is an exact image of a miniature humming bird. The breast is green, the wings deep rose color, the throat yellow and the head and beak almost pure black. The only particular in which it is not a perfect bird is that the stem gives it the appearance of having but a single leg and foot.

BE CHEERFUL.

Strive at all times to be cheerful. What a subtle kind of heartache we give others by simply not being at our best and highest, when they have to make allowances for us, when the dark side is uppermost in our minds and we take their sunlight and courage away by even our unspoken thoughts, our atmosphere of heaviness! Oh, to stand always and eternally for sunlight and life and cheer!

The sea is often luminous on summer nights because the phosphoric acid contained in decaying jellyfish, being deprived of oxygen, is converted into phosphorus. This unites with the oxygen of the air and becomes luminous.
