In the equipment furnished each infantryman by the Ordnance Bureau of the war department are 9½ pounds of iron and steel. This is exclusive of the uniform equipment provided by the Quartermaster Corps.

The receiving hospital for the United States soldiers brought back from Europe to be established at Staten Island, N. Y., will have a capacity of 2500 beds. This marks the beginning of a comprehensive plan for the care of soldiers who are disabled in the line of duty.

It will be used only for distribution.

From the Staten Island institution men will be transferred to general or special treatment hospitals, sites for which are now being selected throughout the country. Whenever possible, injured soldiers will be sent to places near their own homes. They will be fitted for trades to which they are adapted, and at the time of discharge the government will assist them in returning to their proper places in industry.

The laboratory at the Army and Medical School has shipped since April 1 sufficient typhoid and paratyphoid vaccines to inocuate every man in the army.

Throughout the process of making the vaccine is guarded against any contamination. It is then stored in sealed vessels in locked refrigerators, to which only the two officers in charge have keys, and none of these vessels is ever moved, except in company of one of the officers. In more than six months of large-scale production not a trace of contamination has been found.

One of the tests of the vaccine includes the inoculation of a mouse, a guinea pig, and a rabbit. If too much tricesol (a coal-tar product used a preservative and to kill the bacilli) had been added, the mouse would be killed. Should tetanus germs be present both the mouse and the guinea pig would be killed. With the emulsion correct, as it must be to be used, no animal is killed, and the guinea pig and rabbit are not visibly affected by the inoculation.
