Estimating Enemy Columns

A SOLDIER in a perilous tree top. He made one hand to hold on—the other for his binoculars. He is estimating the enemy column. Soldiers measure their days, their marches, their stances on the border of time. A soldier must have the most exact time, and it must be on his wrist where he can see it at a glance.

This wrist watch must be built to stand because and it must show time in the dark.

European experience has proved the Ingersoll Radiolite Wrist Watch the best. The hands and figures are made of Radiolite, containing genuine radium, and glow upwards from ten years. Civilian, too, are finding the wrist watch most convenient.
